

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

INTRODUCTION

Dialogue, dialectic; διαλέγεσθαι, δαίλογος, διαλεκτικός. These words furnish a clew to the Socratic wisdom. It was a methodical exercise of the reasoning faculty that enabled Socrates, first of all men, to realize completely the Delphian maxim, γῶθι σαυτόν. By no other way than through self-scrutiny, critically applied in the form of question and answer, could he have been led to affirm, what no man had learned to say before, ἄ μὴ οἶδα οὐδὲ οἶομαι εἶδέναι, and to announce the conviction formulated in the words, ὁ ἀνεξέταστος βίος οὐ βιωτὸς ἀνθρώπῳ. The identity of knowledge and virtue, as maintained by Socrates; the union of intellectual and moral excellence in the person of the sage, celebrated by both of his eminent companions, — such a consummation can hardly be comprehended without taking some account of the process whereby we know it to have been achieved.

In the time of Xenophon and Plato, whose chief writings formed a memorial and as it were a continuation of the life work of their illustrious master, a philosophical terminology had not yet been elaborated in the Greek language. At that period the word "philosophy" itself was vague and unsettled in its application, and a groundwork for the now familiar and important distinction between art and science had only just begun to be wrought out. A few words, however, were gradually assuming, side by side with their popular usage, a special meaning adapted to more exact or conscious modes of thought than properly pertain to poetry or eloquence; and other new words were coming to be framed to meet the needs of newly recognized activities of the mind. The familiar verb διαλέγεσθαι 'to converse' acquires a special significance and value though Socrates' habitual method of testing the genuineness of knowledge, while, under the same impulse, the adjective διαλεκτικός, already employed in a technical way, is finally converted to an exclusively philosophical use.

That Socrates was himself aware of a special coloring that attached to the word διαλέγεσθαι, as he used it, is indicated by a curious pointed reference to διαλέγειν 'to distinguish,' which he makes in one of the conversations with Euthydemus reported by Xenophon. Speaking of temperance and self-control, he averred that it was the faculty of distinguishing between what was good and what was bad for a man that enabled the possessors of these virtues to direct their conduct in accordance with them; and he said that διαλέγεσθαι took its name from διαλέγειν, because it meant mutual deliberation in the way of discriminating by classification.¹

The διαλεκτικός ἀνὴρ is he who knows how to ask and to answer questions.² A deficiency in such skill on the part even of superior minds is apt to betray inaccuracy in the use of language and more or less of the accompanying confusion of ideas. The young men who listened to Socrates occasionally undertook to imitate him and try their own hand at cross-questioning the unwary. Xenophon has preserved a specimen of this sort of experiment in a conversation said to have passed between Alcibiades when a mere youth and his guardian and maternal relative Pericles, the foremost man of Athens. — Alcibiades. Can you tell me, Pericles, what law is? Pericles. Certainly I can. Alcibiades. Do pray instruct me, then. I hear some commended as law-abiding persons, but I fancy no one would deserve this compliment who did not know what law is. Pericles. Well, Alcibiades, in trying to find out what law is, you are in quest of no very difficult matter. Laws are what the assembled people enact and approve, indicating what ought to be done and what not. Alcibiades. In the belief that what is good ought to be done, or what is bad? Pericles. What is good, to be sure, young man, not what is bad. Alcibiades. If, however, it is not the people who assemble, but supposing a few men, in an oligarchy somewhere, get together and enact what ought to be done, what is that? Pericles. All deliberate enactments or prescriptions by the controlling power of the state receive the name of law. Alcibiades. If a tyrant, then, in control of the state, prescribes to its members what they are to do, is that law too? Pericles. Yes, the prescriptions of a tyrant who governs the state are likewise termed law. Alcibiades. But what is force and lawlessness, Pericles? Is it not when the stronger constrains the weaker to do what he chooses, not with the weaker man's consent, but by compulsion? Pericles. Yes, I think it is. Alcibiades. Then what a tyrant by his prescriptions compels the citizens to do against their will, is that lawlessness? Pericles. I believe it is. I take back what I said about the arbitrary prescriptions of a tyrant being law. Alcibiades. But the enactments of the few, based on superior power, not on the consent of the many, are we to call that force, or not? Pericles. I think that all compulsion, exercised by one person upon another, against the will of the latter, by enactment or otherwise, is rather force than law. Alcibiades. And what the sovereign people, then, superior in power to those who possess property, enacts against the will of the latter, would that be force rather than law? Pericles. Alcibiades, we were ourselves, at your age, tolerably clever at this sort of thing. We used to practice at precisely the same quibbles that you seem to be practicing now. Alcibiades. Oh, Pericles, how I wish I could have been with you then, when you were at your best in the business!¹—The story is a good one in an illustrative way, and it acquires a piquant flavor by being attached to two such distinguished names as those which figure in it. Among the several classes of persons enumerated in the Platonic Apology to whom Socrates applied his tests, the statesmen are said to have proved especially incompetent to give a rational account of the matters which occupied their attention. There would indeed be far more subtle difficulties to contend with in the discussion of political and ethical questions than the mere ambiguity of such a term as νόμος, before sufficient dialectical skill could be attained to command sound reasoning, either in one's own mind or in the minds of others.

To live for philosophy, examining myself and other men, such I conceived to be my mission—declares Socrates to his judges, in the Apology.—While διαλέγεσθαι is properly said of conversation among several persons, the word can easily be transferred to the questioning of one's own mind, the communing of the spirit with itself, ὁ ἐντὸς τῆς ψυχῆς πρὸς αὐτὴν διάλογος.—Ἀλλὰ τί ἦ μοι ταῦτα φίλος διελέξατο θυμός; Thus exclaims Hector, as he awaits the onset of Achilles, nerving himself to overcome the promptings of invalorous discretion.²—In the Symposium of

² X 122, cp. A 407, P 97, Φ 562. In Homer the self-interrogating formula quoted is employed to mark the turning-point of what would ordinarily be regarded as a moral conflict in the speaker's soul. In the theory and practice

Plato, Socrates, while on his way to the house of Agatho, there to meet by invitation Aristophanes, Alcibiades, and other friends of the tragic poet, encounters one of his devoted followers, whom he takes along to the banquet as an uninvited guest, promising to make his apology to their host. — Socrates seemed rather preoccupied and disposed to lag behind (relates Aristodemus), and the upshot of it was odd enough. When we reached the house we found the door open. A servant met me and conducted me at once into the presence of the banqueters already reclining at table. 'Welcome, Aristodemus,' exclaimed Agatho; 'if you have come for anything different from the dinner, pray defer it. I meant to invite you, but could not find you yesterday. But why haven't you brought Socrates?' Then I turned round, and lo! no Socrates was to be seen. 'I came with Socrates,' I said, 'by his invitation, to your banquet.' 'Excellent,' said Agatho; 'but where is the man?' 'He was right behind me a moment ago,' I replied; 'but I am as much at a loss as you are, where he can be now.' Upon this a servant was sent to look up the missing guest (so the history proceeds), and, returning presently, reported that Socrates was standing in the vestibule of a neighboring house and would pay no attention to any summons to the feast. 'Ridiculous! go and call him again, and don't let him off.' 'Nay, not so' (interposed Aristodemus); 'leave him to himself. It's a way he has. He steps off a bit, wherever it happens to be, and stands there. He will be here directly; but don't disturb him, just let him be.' The banquet then proceeded, and Socrates came not; nor would Aristodemus suffer the repeated orders of the host to fetch him to be carried into effect. Finally, when the feast was of Socrates, however, as he disciplined his own character, a distinction of moral and intellectual was not recognized, nor felt. The preceding quotation is from Plato, Soph. 263 E.

about half over, the philosopher presented himself. 'Come and take your place by me, Socrates' (said Agatho), 'and give me the benefit of the clever idea that came to you in the vestibule. You have caught it and bagged it, I know, or you would never have left the spot.'—Again, in the campaign before Potidaea (Alcibiades is here the narrator) one day early in the morning some reflection had taken shape in his mind, and he stood studying it out. As he did not get on with it, he would not give it up, but remained standing to continue the investigation. Finally, by noonday, the thing began to attract observation, and the word passed wonderingly from mouth to mouth, that Socrates had been standing up in a brown study ever since early in the morning. At last, when evening came, some of the men brought their blankets out after dinner, and slept in the open air—it was the summer season—keeping a wakeful eye on Socrates all the time, to see if he would stand up all night. And stand he did, till day broke again; then saluted the sun and went his way.¹—How the mind of the philosopher was

¹ See Plat. Symp. 174, 175, and 220 C D. The habit attributed to Socrates in these passages, that of the "absent-minded" man, "absence of mind," popularly so termed, would evince in Plato's estimation the most complete presence of the conscious intellect, a concentrated power of abstraction and analysis, as opposed to the inspired working of poetic and other artistic genius, where according to Plato the mind of the man is 'absent.' Ion 534 B οὐ πρότερον οἷός τε ποιεῖν [ὁ ποιητής], πρὶν ἂν ἐνθεὸς τε γένηται καὶ ἐκφῶν καὶ ὁ νοῦς μηκέτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐνῇ. Cp. Apol. 22 B C, where Socrates is made to say of the poets examined by him, that they could give no rational account of the poems which they had themselves composed. Aristophanes seems to have hit on somewhat of the same view, Ach. 398. Here the servant of Euripides, on being asked whether the poet is at home, replies that his mind has gone out, but he is himself in the house, upstairs, writing a tragedy:—

ὁ νοῦς μὲν ἔξω ξυλλέγων ἐπύλλια
οὐκ ἔνδον, αὐτὸς δ' ἔνδον ἀναβάδην ποιεῖ τραγωδίαν.

occupied at such moments and to what sort of purpose his self-communings were put, there can be no doubt, in view of the solemn asseverations of the Apology taken in connection with the illustrations furnished elsewhere of the tests which he applied to other minds.

You have affirmed (says Socrates to Protagoras in the Dialogue named in honor of the great sophist) that wisdom, temperance, courage, justice, holiness, are not names of one and the same thing, but that they are parts of a whole — that whole being virtue. And you maintain that these parts of virtue are not quantitative and similar, like separate portions of a mass of gold, but qualitative and dissimilar, as are the features — the eyes, nose, mouth, etc., which are the parts that go to make up the whole face or countenance. Protagoras. I do indeed affirm that all these are parts of virtue; but while four of the five parts stand fairly upon a like footing, yet one of them, courage (ἀνδρεία), is quite different from the others. There are many persons who are unjust, unholy, intemperate, and ignorant, but yet in a high degree courageous. Socrates. Do you term courageous persons bold? Protagoras. Yes, and forward enough, where the most are backward. Socrates. Do you admit that virtue is a beautiful thing, and act upon the assumption that it is beautiful? Protagoras. Certainly I do. Socrates. Is virtue something partly beautiful (καλόν) and partly ugly (αἰσχρόν), or is it wholly beautiful? Protagoras. Wholly beautiful, by all means. Socrates. Do you know of men going boldly down into deep wells, under the water? Protagoras. Yes. Socrates. Is it because they understand the business that they can do this thing? Protagoras. Yes. Socrates. In fighting on horseback, is it they who understand, or they who do not understand horsemanship, who do this fighting boldly? Protagoras. They who understand. So in other matters, those who understand are bolder than those who do not. Socrates. But have you never seen persons, unskilled in matters of this kind, yet bold in regard to them? Protagoras. Yes, I have, very bold indeed. Socrates. Are, then, such bold persons as these also courageous? Protagoras. Nay, in that case, courage would be an ugly thing in very truth. Such persons are simply mad! Socrates. But did you not term the courageous bold? Protagoras. Yes, and I do now. Socrates. So then, these persons, bold in the manner last described, are seen to be not courageous, but mad. But those previously described, the wise and skillful, they also are bold, and, in being bold, courageous. So, according to the argument, knowledge would be courage, would it not?¹—The respondent in the above conversation had seen fit to assert that courage consists with ignorance. The questions and answers that ensue show that the assertion is itself inconsistent with what the maker of it believes and admits. He had, in fact, undertaken to discuss courage before defining the word to his own mind, and had proceeded as if ἀνδρεία and θάρρος were terms having the same connotation or comprehension. By the dialectic interrogatory he is checked and reminded that one of the terms is more comprehensive than the other. Thus:—

All courage is boldness.

Some boldness is not courage.

In a conversation with Euthyphro, a soothsayer, who had undertaken to prosecute his own father for homicide, an attempt is made to arrive at a definition of holiness (ὁσιότης).—Is holiness (asks Socrates) something consistent and invariable in all its manifestations, and is unholiness something consistently and invariably opposed to holiness, presenting always one and the same form or appearance (ἰδέα)? Euthyphro. Yes, certainly. Socrates. Tell me now, what you call the holy and the unholy?

Euthyphro. I say that the holy is just what I am doing now, indicting a wrong-doer in a matter of bloodguiltiness, or sacrilege, or something of that sort. To fail so to act is unholy. Socrates. You are not answering my question. I asked you what the holy (τὸ ἅγιον 'holiness') is; but you have only told me that the thing which you are now doing is holy. Are not many other things also holy? Euthyphro. Yes. Socrates. Well, then, I did not request you to cite one or two of the many things that are holy, but to name the precise mark (εἶδος, species) whereby all things holy are recognized as holy. You remember, do you not, that you admitted just now that holy things are holy and unholy things unholy, by presenting always one and the same form or appearance? Euthyphro. I do. Socrates. Tell me, then, what that form is. Euthyphro. That which is acceptable to the gods is holy, the unacceptable to the gods is unholy. Socrates. Are we told that the gods have their mutual-differences, that there is enmity among them? Euthyphro. We are, indeed. Socrates. Now, then, if you and I had a difference about odd and even in number, or about greater and less in size, or heavier and lighter in weight, would such differences render us inimical, or should we resort to counting, or to measuring, or to weighing, and settle our difference? Euthyphro. That is what we should do. Socrates. But in case we happened to differ about right and wrong, beautiful and ugly, good and bad, we might find ourselves continually at enmity, for having no criterion whereby we could settle the difference — might we not? Euthyphro. Yes. Socrates. Then it must be that the gods cherish their reputed mutual enmities for this reason, because they have no criterion to determine what is good and bad, right and wrong, etc.? Euthyphro. It must. Socrates. But they love what is beautiful and good, and hate the opposite, do they not? Euthyphro. Certainly. Socrates. But, as you concede, the same things are held to be good by some of the gods, and bad by others — this being the cause of their dissensions? Euthyphro. Yes. Socrates. Thus, apparently, the same things would be beloved by gods and hated by gods? Euthyphro. Apparently. Socrates. Then the same things would be both holy and unholy, according to this reasoning? Euthyphro. It looks that way. . . . Socrates. So, then, you have not answered my question yet. Let us correct our statement, and say that what all the gods hate is unholy, and what they all love is holy. Euthyphro. Why not? Socrates. But note again, is the holy loved by the gods because it is holy, or is it holy because it is loved by the gods? Euthyphro. I don't know what you mean. Socrates. I mean like this. Is that which is beloved, for example, beloved because it is loved, or is it loved because it is beloved? Euthyphro. The former. It is beloved because it is loved. Socrates. How, then, with the holy? Is it holy because it is loved by the gods, or is it loved by the gods because it is holy? Euthyphro. The latter. It is loved by the gods because it is holy. Socrates. So, again, you have not told me yet what the essence (οὐσία) of holiness is; you have only named one of its accidents (πάθος τι), viz. that it is loved by the gods.¹ — Here, the first replies of Euthyphro are typical of the uninstructed mind that cannot readily apprehend the significance of a general term or abstract notion apart from the particulars which it denotes. He confuses τὸ ὅσιον and ὁσιόν τι. When set aright in this regard, he next betrays (to pass over Socrates' animadversion upon the soothsayer's conception of his gods) his inability to avoid confounding a real proposition with an identical or merely verbal one. That which is loved by the gods is holy — says Euthyphro, attempting to define holiness: ὃ τι φιλεῖται ὑπὸ τῶν θεῶν ὁσιόν ἐστιν. He is brought to see that this, like ὃ τι φιλεῖται φιλούμενόν ἐστιν, is merely a verbal proposition, not a real proposition, nor a definition. And, finally, it is impressed upon his mind that the corrected statement, That which is holy is loved by the gods (ὁ τι ὁσιόν ἐστι φιλεῖται ὑπὸ τῶν θεῶν), though a real proposition, nevertheless affords no definition of the term holiness.

The two condensed and abbreviated examples above presented — scraps from the sumptuous profusion spread out in the Platonic writings — will have served partially to illustrate the essential features of the art of which Socrates made himself the champion. By it were evolved the first principles of Logic. Forming, as that science does, the common framework of the whole edifice of the sciences since erected, Logic had its origin in the conversations of Socrates. "In our present state of knowledge . . . every student has been rendered familiar with the ordinary terms and gradations of logic and classification, — such as genus, definition, individual things as comprehended in a genus; what each thing is, and to what genus it belongs, etc. But familiar as these words have now become, they denote a mental process of which, in 440–430 B.C., few men besides Socrates had any conscious perception. Of course, men conceived and described things in classes, as is implied in the very form of language, and in the habitual junction of predicates with subjects in common speech. . . . But though this was done . . . it was wanting in that analytical consciousness which would have enabled any one to describe, explain, or vindicate what he was doing. The ideas of men — speakers as well as hearers, the productive minds as well as the recipient multitude — were associated together in groups favorable rather to emotional results, or to poetical, rhetorical narrative and descriptive effect, than to methodical generalization, to scientific conception, or to proof either inductive or deductive. That reflex act of attention which enables men to understand, compare, and rectify their own mental process, was only just beginning. . . . It may be doubted whether any one before Socrates ever used the words 'genus' and 'species,' originally meaning family and form, in the philosophical sense now exclusively appropriated to them. Not one of those many names — called by logicians names of the second intention — which imply distinct attention to various parts of the logical process, and enable us to consider and criticise it in detail, then existed. All of them grew out of the schools of Plato, Aristotle, and the subsequent philosophers, so that we can thus trace them in their beginning to the common root and father, Socrates." And further, "His conversations . . . exhibit the main features of a genuine inductive method, struggling against the deep-lying, but unheeded, errors of the early intellect acting by itself, without conscious march or scientific guidance, — of the intellectus sibi permissus, — upon which Bacon so emphatically dwells."¹ The mighty consequences of such an initiative not even the imagination of a Plato was capable of prefiguring; but the fervid enthusiasm of both master and disciple, inspired by the conscious power which the new instrument enabled them to exercise, gave earnest of its future. To us, as we look back, the results of the way of reason, then for the first time clearly opened up and methodically pursued, are so momentous that, before it appeared, true learning seems hardly to have had an existence or a name. To Plato, with equal right, the Dialectic which Socrates had taught him was the culmination of all doctrines, the coping stone and crown of education.¹

The Socratic labors were in fact a methodical quest of truth. To clear the ground for a reception of the truth, by dispelling the confusion and eradicating the error which he found inherent in the minds of men and of which by profound self-scrutiny he had sought to purge his own mind, was the end to which the efforts of that wonderful life were devoted, not only with a zeal absolutely disinterested, but with a concentration and intensity equal to the rapt devotion of inspired art. First it was Periclean Athens, then the whole period of the depressing and exhausting War, finally the brief reign of the Thirty, followed by the few years of the Restored Constitution which Socrates survived to see. In the city colonnades, at the gymnasia and the palaestrae, wherever the youth were wont to resort, or with a congenial friend or two in the plane-trees' shade by the Ilissus, at the camp or on the march in Boeotia or Thrace, back again in the teeming market-place, — each day, early and late, the singular figure of the philosopher was to be seen, the stirring voice and the responses evoked by it were to be heard. It was a unique specimen of the sophistic tribe, and a homely one enough, with his eternal illustrations from cooks and carpenters, from shoemaking and horse-breaking, always saying the same things,² and never seeming to arrive at any tangible conclusions. Here were indeed no imposing theories of the Cosmos to be promulgated, no elaborate discourses to win admiration for the learning and eloquence of their author. Here was no assumption of wisdom, nothing dogmatical to replace the seeming blank left in men's minds after the incisive interrogatory had traversed them. Burdened by no conceit of his own, he rarely was at pains to spare the conceit of others,¹ barring an often playful manner, and that irony, which, while it professed to mitigate, must frequently have aggravated, the humiliation of the respondent. The victim writhed, the bystanders jeered and applauded. Sometimes it was fierce anger and a blow. The remorseless dialectic, handled with a specialist's unerring skill, cut deep—whether the questioner so willed or not—into hazy conventional beliefs, the prejudices and hypocrisies of traditional, localized habits of thought. Surely (men said) there must be something behind so much pretending not to know. What was παύει. Cp. Symp. 221 E. Xen. Mem. 4. 4. 6 (a conversation with the sophist Hippias) "Ἐτι γὰρ σύ, ἔφη, ὦ Σώκρατες, ἐκεῖνα τὰ αὐτὰ λέγεις, ἃ ἐγὼ πάλαι ποτέ σου ἤκουσα; καὶ ὁ Σωκράτης· "Ὁ δέ γε τούτου δευτέρων, ἔφη, ὦ Ἴππια, οὐ μόνον αἰεὶ τὰ αὐτὰ λέγω, ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ τῶν αὐτῶν. Mem. 1. 2. 37 records a reference to one of Socrates' similes by a member of the Board of Thirty, brought home to the philosopher in a very pointed way.

this threadbare sophist driving at?—this fanatical fellow with his Daemon that some of his mad followers could tell about, giving him signs and portents not vouchsafed to ordinary mortals. The disturbing effects of the Socratic procedure, in public and private, were inevitable and far-reaching, as they were subtle and penetrating. But of the misunderstanding sure to follow, of the ridicule, the enmity, the danger, he took no account. It was the self-forgetting ardor of the scientific observer and investigator, when science and philosophy were yet one, and when the moral phases of reasoned truth were first beginning to reveal their luster—a complete devotion such as merely human motives seemed inadequate to explain.—That you have in me (Plato makes Socrates say to his judges) one to be recognized, as given by God to Athens, here is the proof: it does not look human-like, thus for so many years to have taken no thought of my own interests, letting my domestic affairs go all-unheeded, to gain time for looking after you. For that care I have accepted no compensation. This poverty is my witness.¹

The temperament of Socrates, pure-human and intense, impelled his mind to proceed on the convergent lines of one unerring method toward sure and definite achievement. He was moved to carry into the province of intellectual labor an orderly concentration of energy analogous to that specializing in the field of art which his countrymen so perfectly understood. The contrast presented by the skilled artisan, on the one hand, proceeding according to an elaborate set of rules, based more or less consciously upon well-tested principles, and, on the other hand, the statesman, dealing at haphazard with the exigencies of government, or the professional sophist, complacently purveying of his store of encyclopaedic learning, was repeatedly brought forward in the Socratic conversations.¹ Himself at first trained in the craft of his father, to be a sculptor, the son of Sophroniscus had been born for philosophy; and his birth occurred at a moment when the times were ripe for a genius such as his. The middle of the fifth century B.C. was not too soon to begin, here and there, to give a specific direction to the purely intellectual activities, by turning the rays of reason through a burning glass as it were, with effects of irrefutable certainty, upon some chosen point. The field of cosmical speculation, as it lay before Socrates, a scene of apparently interminable strife, not only afforded no opportunity for the exercise of his peculiar powers, but was repulsive to his religious sentiment. He was instinctively led, by the very constitution of his mind, to maintain a conservative attitude toward the religious observances of his native city.² There were points

² To this fact in particular Xenophon bears witness with abundant emphasis, as, in general, the most orthodox and least thoughtful of the Socratics has laid wearisome stress upon those external traits and homely virtues of the master which were common to all the best, and which he himself shared and could understand. We are not to suppose that Socrates' conception of divinity answered to the vulgar notion of gods, whatever he may have allowed his friend Xenophon to infer from his outward observance of religious rites. He knew how to respect the aspirations of the great thinkers who were his predecessors and his contemporaries, not the less because he could not accept any of their positive conclusions; and in his youth he had lived, as we are credibly informed, on terms of intimacy with Archelaus, a disciple of Anaxagoras. The words put into the mouth of Socrates by Plato, Apol. 35 D, are significantly phrased — concluding, νομίζω γάρ, ὃ ἄνθρωποι Ἀθηναῖοι, ὡς οὐδεὶς τῶν ἐμῶν κατηγορῶν. Mr. Grote observes, H.G., v. 8, c. 68, citing Cic. Tusc. 5. 4. 10, where Socrates is said to have brought down philosophy from the heavens to the earth, that "his attempt to draw the line between that which was and was not scientifically discoverable" is "remarkable, inasmuch as it enough wherein the popular theology was conspicuously unworthy, and upon these the Athenian sage was not the first to lay his finger; but a skeptical demeanor, where no conflict between religion and morality was apparent to him, would have been logically impossible for Socrates. Such a course would have been equivalent to an overstepping of his 'appointed province' — a meddling with matters that were not amenable to the only touchstone which he knew. He found no way of applying his elenchus here. Whatever misgivings may have been stirred in his heart by the great voices to which he listened in his youth, it was foreign to his disposition to suffer a speculative doubt to divert him from actions which not only involved no human wrong, but seemed to provide means of satisfying a powerful and inexplicable human craving. To find a trace of insincerity in the religious conduct of Socrates were to make him forestall some of the remotest consequences of his own labors.

Not the whole of Nature, therefore, appealed to the aspirations of such a mind or lent itself to dialectic treatment, but only that small part of Nature which is man, — of man, however, the transcendent, supremely human portion, his moral being. The primary motive of Socrates' activity must be sought, not in an intellectual (to draw for the moment a distinction which to him was meaningless), but in a moral, impulse. His philosophizing was in the fullest sense practical; it was nevertheless pure philosophy, for the very reason that he felt the springs of virtue and knowledge within himself as flowing from a common source. The identity of virtue and knowledge was a working hypothesis, so to speak, furnished by his consciousness: in his own spiritual experience he had found that right living was secured by sound shows his conviction that the scientific and the religious point of view mutually excluded one another, so that where the latter began, the former ended."

thinking; and he applied this theory to explain the aberrations which he observed in the lives of others.¹ Socrates craved a knowledge of the truth as something preëminently useful; and he recognized no utility detached from moral and intellectual well-being. For the ultimate happiness of the individual he could not conceive of a disharmony between the good and the true, the true and the useful, between intellectual and moral good. To him, truth was not divisible, it was something elementary and simple. Unhappiness and discontent; the shortcomings and perversities of human conduct; the injustice, bad faith, and calamity which he was forced daily to contemplate in the social and political world, — all these he marked as radically the effects of ignorance. Not ignorance as popularly apprehended, but ignorance of self — and consequently of what is best for oneself: an ignorance nourished by a false conceit of knowledge. Wisdom consisted in the absence of such conceit. This purblind folly it was that caused men to grope darkly and wander far astray in search of their fancied welfare. In his own person he had proved that the cure of ignorance is the cure of evil; and the mighty force of his conviction swept him forward to apply the cure to others by the same philosophy.

When the position of Socrates as the apostle of sound thinking and right living, the determined adversary of mental inertia, ¹ For discussion and criticism of the paradox, οὐδὲν ἐκὼν ἐξαμαρτάνει, see GROTE, Plato, v. 1, pp. 398 ff.; GOMPERZ, Griechische Denker, Eng. Transl., v. 2, c. 4. It is touched upon in Xen. Mem. 4. 2. 19, and Plato (who deals with it explicitly elsewhere) brings it into the Apology, 25 D. "Considering the fanciful, far-fetched ideas, upon which alone the Pythagoreans and other predecessors had shaped their theories respecting virtues and vices, the wonder is that Socrates, who had no better guides to follow, should have laid down an ethical doctrine which has the double merit of being true, as far as it goes, legitimate, and of comprehensive generality: though it errs, mainly by stating a part of the essential conditions of virtue — sometimes also a part of the ethical end — as if it were the whole." — GROTE, H.G., v. 8, c. 68.

has once been clearly recognized, there is little difficulty in apprehending why it was the Negative Arm of Philosophy (as the dialectical method has been termed) which the steadfast search for truth would call mainly into exercise. No lengthy explanation is needed to account for the sharp antithesis of dialectic and rhetoric that impressed itself upon the mind of the master and has been brought to view in his name with signal force by Plato the disciple. In the story of Socrates the Art of Persuasion, as commonly practiced, invites mention only to be summarily dismissed. — I am a forgetful sort of a fellow, Protagoras (he remarks at the close of a brilliant and applauded sally by the learned sophist, impatient at being held down to answers continually redounding to his own confusion), — my memory is short, and if anybody makes a long speech I am apt to forget what the conversation is about. If I happened to be a trifle deaf and you wanted to talk with me, you would naturally feel bound to speak a little louder to me than to the others; in the same way now, finding me as forgetful as I am, pray contract your replies and make them briefer, if you expect me to follow you.¹ — The proper function of rhetoric was to enforce the personal views and aims of the rhetor himself, or, at the best, to set forth matters of fact and advance arguments couched in the unreasoned and unchallenged terms of commonplace. Not only was rhetoric an inappropriate instrument of philosophy, of the disinterested pursuit of truth pure and simple, but the Socratic art and the expository art moved on lines of precisely contrary direction. Thus, further, Socrates was compelled emphatically to disclaim the name of teacher. The word διδάσκαλος conveyed a notion of authority, of learned acquirement and the imparting of positive doctrine. But the dialectic interrogatory rested on no authoritative basis in the mind of the questioner, and aimed to destroy in the mind of the questioned any conceit of knowledge based solely on the authority of custom or tradition. Even though the novice seemed to undergo a shock of intellectual paralysis, it were well so, provided his mind could be cleared and a way opened up for reasoned truth to enter. — The Thessalian Meno, in the Dialogue which bears his name, a fluent talker who had communed with Gorgias himself, cross-examined by Socrates, and repeatedly baffled in his attempts to make such replies as shall define the meaning he attaches to virtue (ἀρετή), — which at the outset, in an inquiry of his own, he had assumed as perfectly well understood, — exclaims, upon receiving the suggestion to start afresh and renew the search from the beginning: — Before I met you, Socrates, I used to hear it said that you were little better than a mass of perplexity yourself and an author of perplexity in others; and here you are now, calling down your spells and incantations upon me, until I am utterly bewildered. You seem — if I am to perpetrate a bit of mockery — to bear a close resemblance, as to your features and in every other way, to that flat-looking fish we have in the sea, the torpedo. It stuns and dazes everybody who comes near enough to touch it — just as you have stunned and dazed me. Body and soul, I am so benumbed that I can frame no answers to your questions. Yet I have discoursed a thousand times about virtue, to hearers without number, and with good success, as I fancied. But now I cannot even state what virtue is. Were you to practice in any other city than Athens what you are doing here, you would stand a good chance of being arrested as a sorcerer. — Well, Meno (rejoins Socrates), if this flatfish of yours only dazes people because it is completely dazed itself, I certainly resemble it; otherwise, I do not. It is no freedom from perplexity in my own mind that enables me to produce perplexity in the minds

Nevertheless, we know that the mission of Socrates was to teach. His life affords a typical illustration of the distinction which requires to be drawn between the current and a more exquisite meaning of the word "teacher." The Sophists who were his contemporaries were teachers in the current sense, dealing with matters analogous to much that is comprised

under the term "higher education" at the present day. They were widely versed in the learned accomplishments of their time; fluent and attractive lecturers; a few of them great original thinkers, as Protagoras of Abdera; some with special proclivities, like Prodicus of Ceos, who expounded the synonyms of the language. In an era of freshly stimulated intellectual vigor and rapidly widening opportunities for its exercise they were the professors of the liberal arts and sciences as then known; and the instruction they offered was eagerly sought for by young men who could afford to pay the fees, whether the motive might be an innate love of learning, or, as would be true of the great majority of cases, the ambition to cultivate effectively those talents believed to be most helpful in enabling their possessor to rise to a position of influence and distinction in public affairs. The methods of the Sophists were not merely expository, but in a way also dialectical and critical, the fundamental difference between their activity and that of Socrates being given in the antithesis of rhetoric and Socratic dialectic already explained. An attempt to find the counterparts of the Sophists of the fifth century B.C. in modern education, not professional or technical, would require us first to eliminate those teachers of the mathematical and physical or natural sciences who are at the same time trained investigators, and further, in considering the residue, to make a proper deduction for the employment of strictly reasoned method in the teaching of subjects not themselves of scientific character, or not yet brought completely under the domain of science.¹

For Socrates, on the other hand, so unique was his environment, so unexampled his historical position, we should vainly seek a modern counterpart, whether as typified in a class or embodied in an individual. It can be conceived as the spirit of all true learning personified,—as the ideal teacher,—imparting of himself rather than of his acquisitions, keeping first principles steadily in sight and never mistaking the semblance for the reality of knowledge.

What is called “personal magnetism” pertains to a spiritual realm unexplored and impenetrable. The ultimate sources of this influence lie in the emotional, unconscious regions of the soul; and no one undertakes to account completely for its manifestations, even in the case of individuals often seen and intimately known. To Socrates his contemporaries have attributed a power over the minds of his companions and hearers which seemed to them something magical and superhuman. In fact the Athenian sage united in his personality, to an unparalleled degree, the temperament of strong feeling, of ardent, even violent passions, and a supreme intellectual faculty, holding appear the better reason” to any who would pay liberally for the instruction. The words “sophistry,” “sophistical,” so far as they are used to denote fallacious reasoning exercised with the intent to deceive, cannot be fitly applied to the Sophists of the fifth century B.C. as a class, nor to any individual among them of whom we have received accounts. In fact, a great part of the sophistry (to give the word its widest meaning) that is always rife, consists of unsound doctrine which is not recognized as fallacious by those who inculcate or disseminate it. “It has been the practice of writers on logic . . . to represent logical fallacies as frauds devised and maintained by dishonest practitioners. This view of the case appears to me incomplete and misleading. It substitutes the rare and accidental in place of the constant and essential. The various sophisms . . . are not the inventions of Sophists. They are erroneous tendencies of the reasoning process, frequently incident to human thought and speech: specimens of those ever-renewed ‘inadvertencies of ordinary thinking’ which it is the peculiar mission of philosophy or ‘reasoned truth’ to rectify.” —GROTE, Plato, v. 1, p. 550.

the will in check and guiding it upon lines of pure reason.¹ The rare "combination of moral enthusiasm and logical discipline" could not fail to produce marvelous effects in those upon whose minds it was systematically brought to bear. It was a character complex, yet simple in its unsullied consistency; precepts of justice, temperance, courage — ideas weighed in cold thought and issuing in burning words — were to be seen exemplified in every action, proved in every ordeal or opportunity. How came such a soul to be lodged in the uncouth frame and to play behind the gross features of a satyr, unless indeed the spirit of a divinity were hidden under that disguise? — The

¹ "All centuries have produced their quota of strong, clear, cool heads; and there has rarely been any lack of warm hearts. But the two are rarely combined, and the rarest phenomenon of all is a heart of mighty power working with all its force to keep the head above it cool, as a steam engine may give motion to a refrigerating machine. Such a combination occurs but once in a millennium on any large scale. But when it does occur, it exerts, as if to compensate for its rarity, an influence which persists unexhausted for a long train of centuries." — GOMPERZ, Griechische Denker, Eng. Transl., v. 2, p. 45. The author goes on to remark on enthusiasm and emotion generally, as tending rather to obscurity than to clearness of mental vision. Compare, however, the following, from J. S. MILL, on Poetry and its Varieties: "That capacity of strong feeling which is supposed necessarily to disturb the judgment is also the material out of which all motives are made, — the motives, consequently, which lead human beings to the pursuit of truth. The greater the individual's capacity of happiness and misery, the stronger interest has that individual in arriving at truth; and, when once that interest is felt, an impassioned nature is sure to pursue this, as to pursue any other object, with greater ardor: for energy of character is commonly the offspring of strong feeling." The observations above quoted are helpful in the difficult task of separating the Socratic and the Platonic elements intimately fused in the composition of the Dialogues, which, while borrowing the name and voice of him by whose example they were inspired, are at the same time permeated by the genius of the author who conceived and elaborated them. Plato and Socrates were similar in temperament. But we note one significant difference: the Socratic intelligence remained unclouded by obtrusions of the synthetic imagination; the spirit of Plato refused to hover in a single sphere. The mystic background comparison I am going to make (declares Alcibiades in the Symposium) shall be for truth's sake, and no jesting whatever. I say that Socrates is precisely like the Silenus-figures we see in the shops, fashioned in a sitting posture, with flutes or Pan's pipes in their hands. Such is their exterior; but when you open them, images of gods are disclosed within. I compare him also to the satyr Marsyas. That you resemble those beings in form and feature, Socrates, you would not yourself venture to deny; and that the likeness holds good in all respects, listen while I explain. To begin with, you are one of the wantons — What, no? — confess, or I produce my witnesses. A musician too. Ay, a performer more wonderful than Marsyas of the soul was, indeed, all-important to Socrates. There were fixed the roots of his deep religious sentiment; there dwelt and thence spoke his Dæmon, the admonitory Voice. But for him there was no blurring of the boundary line between the Conscious and the Unconscious; his mental vision was disturbed by no confusion of fantasy and reason. With Plato it was far otherwise. To the universal forms so vividly conceived through the Socratic process of abstraction and generalization—to these ideas Plato, turning his back on the particulars from which they flow, saw fit to attribute reality, denying to them their source and origin, and translating them to an alien region. Though he consecrated his life to Philosophy with sincerest devotion, Plato was still incapable of deserting the Muses. Socrates, as it appears, felt certain compunctions on this score, and was moved, at the eleventh hour, to absolve himself, by a pair of humble creative efforts, thus offering some atonement to the Genius of Poesy. Many times during his life a Dream had visited him—the same Dream under divers shapes, but addressing him always in the same words: ὁ Σώκρατες, μουσικὴν ποιεῖ καὶ ἐργάζου. Until the time came for him to die he had taken it for granted that this 'music' meant philosophy—that the purpose of the Dream had been only to encourage and strengthen him in the good work he was actually doing. But now, in the prison cell, on the eve of his departure, he felt bound to guard against the consequences of a possible misunderstanding of the divine injunction. There is a profound suggestiveness in this tale. Socrates, perhaps, did well to absolve himself. It is not the Socratic, but the Platonic, philosophy that could be fairly thought of as μελίσση μουσική. — Phaed. 61.

by far! It was with the instrument into which he breathed that he enchanted all hearers, as all are enchanted now who hear his tunes. The tunes of Olympus, learnt from Marsyas, are the only spells in the world that really bind. Whether the player who performs them be of the best or of the poorest, they are sure to work their will, and by the divinity that is in them reveal the divine needs and religious cravings of the hearer's soul. In only one way do you differ from Marsyas, Socrates, in that with no instrument, but by your bare words, you produce the same effect. When we hear any other speaker, be he never so eloquent, or other words than yours, nobody cares at all, so to say, for that; but when one hears you, or your words spoken by another, though it be a sorry spokesman, let the listener be man, woman, or child, we stand smitten and spellbound. For my own part, gentlemen, if you were not sure to think this wine had completely got the better of me, I would declare to you on oath, how I have been affected by his words, and how they affect me even now. When I hear them, the heart within me bounds more wildly than do the frenzied worshipers of the Great Goddess; tears burst from my eyes at the words he utters. And very many besides myself are affected in the same manner. While listening to Pericles, or to harangues delivered by other eloquent men, I thought they spoke well, to be sure, but they never moved me in this way: there was no tumult in my soul; it did not cry out upon me that I was no better than a slave. But this Marsyas here has made me feel, over and over again, that, being such as I am, it were better not to live. You will not deny the truth, Socrates, of what I say. And I am well aware, to this very day, that if I would lend my ears I could not withstand the spell, but I should have the same experience over again. He compels me to confess, that with all these shortcomings of my own I yet neglect myself to attend to the affairs of Athens. Therefore perforce I stop my ears and flee away as it were from the Sirens' song, that I may not stay right here and grow old seated at the feet of Socrates. He is the only man before whom I have felt, what no one would expect to find in me, the sense of shame. Before him and him alone I do feel it. For I am conscious that I cannot rebut his proofs of my evil-doing, and yet that, when I am away from him, I am powerless to resist the promptings of ambition. Hence it is that I fly from him and shun him, and when I do see him am ashamed of the admissions I have made. Oftentimes I think I would gladly see him no longer among the living; yet again, if that were to happen, I know it would distress me far more — so that I am at a loss what to do with such a man.¹

An appreciable part of the dramatic power of the Dialogues is furnished by their scenery. The scene of a Socratic conversation may either be adapted merely in a general way to the haunts and habits of the philosopher, as when a gymnasium is chosen, or a grove by the Ilissus, or a friend's house in the

— μόνος τῶν ῥητόρων
τὸ κέντρον ἐγκατέλειπε τοῖς ἀκροωμένοις.

Socrates' power over souls would inevitably take on a sinister aspect in the popular mind, and could not fail to enhance the belief that he was a "corrupter of youth." Cp. Ar. Av. 1553 λίμνη τις ἔστ' ἀλουτος οὐ | ψυχαγωγεῖ Σωκράτης. — If it were true that I had harmed the young men (the Defendant says), then their fathers and elder brothers, here present at the trial, ought to be testifying against me, and not in my favor as they all do. Here, for example, is the brother of Theodotus. Theodotus himself is dead, so that he, at any rate, cannot have begged his brother off. Apol. 33 E.

Piræus; or it may be historical, suggested by some memorable occasion in his career. Scenes of the latter sort are those laid in the prison, where Socrates was confined after he had been condemned to death, awaiting the return of the Sacred Galley from Delos, the signal for his execution; and that of the Apology, which transports us to the court-room, into the presence of the accused with his little group of friends, of the three accusers and the five hundred Athenian judges. It must not be supposed, however, that because the scene of a dialogue has been derived from a real event the conversation itself can be taken as a transcript of actual utterances, nor even that the words attributed to the master may not serve to convey views and doctrines peculiar to the disciple. Plato was no recorder of mere facts. The transcendent truth of ideality pervades his writings. They require, in order to distinguish and hear aright the mingled voices, the judgment of sympathetic insight, a certain faculty of divination on the reader's part. Thus, in the Crito, a prison scene, the tender to the prisoner of some means of effecting an escape and his firm refusal to avail himself of the opportunity, are to be noted as facts; and the one all-sufficient argument of consistency advanced in support of the refusal, as well as the principles of right conduct sketched in dialectic form, we promptly recognize as Socratic: we are compelled to judge otherwise of the famous personification of the Laws of Athens, their special plea and grievance, a noble piece of rhetoric, which Plato has seen fit to introduce, to perfect the design of the Dialogue as a whole. The Phædo, again, depicting, with infinite pathos, the last moments in the life of Socrates and his death by the draught of hemlock, forms, thus far, an historical record of inestimable value: but his discourses on the nature and destiny of the soul, the poetic mysticism and the myth-making, with all their artistic appropriateness to such a scene and such an hour, betray their immediate source in the speculative Platonic imagination. These dramatic fictions justify themselves by the laws of art. Yet another sort of combination is met with in the Apology or Defense of Socrates before his Judges. That Dialogue,—for the tone and even the form of dialogue are assumed as far as the fiction of a judicial argument would permit,¹—although its scene is historical, does not record the discourse that was pronounced on the occasion to which it is adapted; nevertheless, in vindicating his master to the world at large, while presenting under the lineaments of Socrates a picture of the ideal sage in its simple unity and integrity, Plato would be moved by feelings of piety, no less than by the sense of artistic fitness, to exclude every feature not essentially characteristic, every line or shade of color not genuine and true to the life.

The Platonic Apology would indeed have seemed most inadequate, whether viewed as vindication or as portrait, had it been made to include no more than the Defendant's plain rejoinder to the indictment considered by the Athenian dicastery, or, composed as it was after the events of the trial were publicly known, had its author omitted to point with scathing force the moral lesson of the verdict rendered, as well as to sound that note of inspired eulogy which no great man is capable of voicing for himself. Socrates in fact pleaded his cause in words the 'truest, the most free, the most just, that were ever heard'¹—as Xenophon avers, who, though he could not be present at the trial, has put together a rambling and fragmentary report of the defense, as described to him, with his own interpretation of its tone. But the pious task that lay before Plato was a larger one than the accused himself had been called upon to undertake, as it is a worthier and greater thing to redeem and immortalize the memory of a man than merely to defer his death. In the indictment preferred by Meletus there were two counts to which Socrates had to answer: the charge of disbelieving in the deities recognized by the state, and importing new ones; and that of corrupting the morals of Athenian youth by teaching such irreligion. Of these offenses (embraced under the comprehensive term ἀσέβεια) a majority of the judges pronounced him guilty. But the author of the Apology widens the field of accusation to include the serious charge of atheism, as well as that of "making the worse appear the better reason," involved in the deep-seated popular misunderstanding, the inveterate prejudice and odium, which had grown up around the name and person of Socrates, and in which Plato finds the remote and principal cause of his condemnation. The rebuttal and denial of such erroneous opinions would be sharp and brief. But while the false view was dispelled, a vision of the truth, sublime and ineffaceable—of the real Socrates and his heavenly commission — must come to replace it for all time.¹

When, in obedience to the divine mandate, I examine men's minds (the Defendant says) and show them that they think they know that whereof they know nothing, or when the youths who imitate me confute in like manner those who fancy themselves wise, the anger they feel is not for themselves and their own ignorance, but is visited on me, and they proceed to talk about 'one Socrates, a pestilent fellow, who makes young people bad.' When asked what he does or what he teaches, to deserve this reproach, they are at a loss for a reply, but to hide their embarrassment fall back upon the current charges indiscriminately urged against all philosophers, of studying what is in the heavens and what is beneath the earth, and of making the worse appear the better reason. Naturally they would not choose to state the truth, that they are exposed in their pretense of knowing what they do not know.² — But it was not merely motives of wounded vanity, of petty jealousy and malice, that formed the basis of such misrepresentation. Under the circumstances of the time a perverted conception of the character of Socrates was inevitable on the part of a numerous class of steady-going persons of conventional habit and stereotyped modes of thought, who were instinctively opposed to the innovations in education, art, and religion that the awakened spirit of intellectual inquiry threatened to effect, and who neither cared nor were competent to discriminate between the individuals whom they identified with the new movement as a whole. The Old Attic Comedy regularly made itself the champion of things as they have been, are, and always should be. For his Clouds, a play designed to cast ridicule upon the entire family of philosophers, Aristophanes found a convenient typical protagonist in the familiar and striking personality of Socrates — an opportunity of effectively presenting a medley of absurdities under a single role. All imaginable reputed crimes of free-thinkers, scientist or sophist, τὰ κατὰ πάντων τῶν φιλοσοφούντων πρόχειρα, are inculcated with object-lessons and glorified by the Socrates of this Comedy, which is still extant in a form sufficiently near to that of its first representation to enable us to judge fairly of its effects. The impression left upon the popular imagination by such a caricature, drawn with the comic poet's unscrupulous art, would form a nucleus round which vague floating opinions could gather, becoming in course of time indistinguishable from an actual knowledge of the man. Upon the prejudice due to such causes the Accusers of Socrates, as Plato affirms, could confidently rely, to enforce their contention, when the circumstances of the Athenian state finally prompted the attack.¹

We shall not attempt to lay before readers of the Apology in advance a detailed summary of its contents or argument. Its threefold division, into defense proper, consideration of penalty after the verdict, and concluding talk with the judges, requires no lengthy explanation; while the composition of the first and most comprehensive of the three parts is of a nature that does not readily lend itself to formal analysis. Throughout the work, in the presentation of its subject on the positive side, each essential trait is revealed with unobtrusive art, the whole character is gradually brought to view, the clear light of the simple Socratic philosophy shines over all, its inherent irony too true and genuine to seem to suffer from Plato's added strain of caustic satire. The evidence of conspicuous illustrative events is incidentally recorded: the protest and steadfast refusal of Socrates as Chairman of the Prytanes to put an illegal motion to the vote of the stormy Assembly on the Pnyx; his quiet disregard of an unjust command imposed by the Thirty Tyrants; and casually as it were, the brief mention of military campaigns wherein he had served the city as a soldier in the phalanx.¹ But matters of fact are everywhere subordinated to the ideal portraiture. Not even the characteristic doctrinal features are permitted, as such, to disturb the true ethical proportions, to mar the moral perspective of this incomparable picture—unfolding as it does the vision of a soul at once so simple and so great, that each several aspect only helps reveal the unity in which it quickly becomes merged and lost. The eloquence of the Apology, of a sort alike unfamiliar to court or ecclesia, to advocate or rhetor, is borne in upon us as the voice of a martyr—bearing witness not to the truth of a belief, but to the belief in truth itself. In the presence of Socrates before his Judges the adherents of all creeds and speculative dogmas can stand together for a brief moment on the terra firma of that wisdom which perfectly comprehends the limitations of human knowledge. It is the sure and unassailable ground of the Agnostic. The singular beauty and impressiveness of the concluding words, when the sage comes to speak of his impending doom, we note as largely attributable to his clear pointing of the boundary line between the unknown and the known. — “Α μὴ οἶδα οὐδὲ οἶμαι εἶδέναι. — Ἄλλὰ χρὴ εὐέλπιδας εἶναι πρὸς τὸν θάνατον, καὶ ἐν τι τοῦτο διανοεῖσθαι ἀληθές, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνδρὶ ἀγαθῷ κακὸν οὐδὲν οὔτε ζῶντι οὔτε τελευτήσαντι.”

The ingenuous reader will do well to hesitate before committing himself to the judgment prompted by the feelings that first arise on contemplating the treatment of Socrates by his native city. What Athens really did was to offer him the choice between a residence elsewhere and a painless death. Protagoras and Anaxagoras, the aliens, facing the same alternatives, could choose the former one; Socrates, the Athenian, who knew himself and had defined to his own mind with precision the evil and the good, was bound to choose the latter. “To be great is to be misunderstood”; and the city gave fresh proof of her incapacity to understand the greatest of her citizens, when she expected him to avoid presenting himself at court in answer to the indictment, or, once there, to propose for himself what would ordinarily be regarded as the lesser penalty. But while she failed to comprehend his essential attributes, there were accessory traits of character and accidental circumstances in the career of the Philosopher that had been noted with grave suspicion by the jealous guardians of civic integrity. Not only had he stood aloof from public life, so far as any voluntary participation in the business of the city was concerned, but he had been wont to criticise various details of a form of polity which he could not thoroughly admire; and men who had worked irreparable damage to the state had been marked as his disciples — notably Critias¹ and Alcibiades, not to mention the renegade, philo-Laconian Xenophon. Political and religious heterodoxy would be felt to have united their baneful influences in depraving the minds of these and other youthful followers who had turned out badly. — The Athenians do not greatly trouble themselves (we read in the Euthyphro) about any cleverness they fancy a man to possess, provided he keep it to himself and refrain from teaching his accomplishment to others; if he does that, it provokes their ire.¹ — Figuratively speaking, the ancient Grecian commonwealths stood in daily terror of their lives. Over and above the danger from external foes, the spirit of faction within the walls never remitted its secret activity, watching for opportunities of open force, while the shadow of the tyrannis was always hovering near. Athens at the close of the fifth century B.C., the Restored Democracy, or, in Aristophanic phrase, the venerable Demus of Pnyx, set on his feet again, — this worthy patriarch, enfeebled by a long and painful illness, with more than one dangerous outbreak of domestic strife attending it, and just escaped from assassination at the hands of a parcel of malcontents, — impatient and mistrustful of his own celebrated tolerance of eccentric deportment on the part of his progeny, has still not lost his native magnanimity, though ready to adopt now and then a drastic measure, retroactive or precautionary, deemed by the family council indispensable to his future security and peace of mind. The same Athens that in 399 B.C. suppresses the voice of Socrates, had, four years earlier, under the lead of Thrasybulus, set an example of purely political clemency up to that time without a parallel in history.

The defendant professes himself bewildered by the persuasive eloquence of his accusers, yet amazed at their extremity of falsehood—above all at their effrontery in warning the judges against HIM as a clever speaker. Can it be they recognize a sort of eloquence quite unlike their own—the eloquence of truth? Its language is not ornate and studied, but spontaneous and simple—even such as becomes the defendant's years.

Therefore he begs his judges to suffer him to speak in his accustomed way, and not in the manner of the courts of law, to which he is a stranger. He deems it fair that they should grant this boon; for the question is, indeed, not one of oratory, but of truth and justice.

2. Ἐγὼ δ' οὖν . . . ἐπελαθόμην: 'as for me, they almost made me forget who I was.' For ὑπ' αὐτῶν see Index, πάσχειν.

1. δεινὸν . . . λέγειν: the phrase is amplified and emphasized by placing καλοῦσιν οὗτοι within it. The arrangement thus gives clear efficiency to the irony of δεινὸν λέγειν here, which the speaker ventures to suggest as an equivalent of τάληθῃ λέγοντα. Index, δεινός.

2. εἰ . . . τοῦτο λέγουσιν: 'if that is what they mean.' What they really meant was Socrates' skill in the dialectic method, popularly regarded as an instrument of sophistry, τὸν ἥττω λόγον κρείττω ποιεῖν.

3. οὐ κατὰ τούτους: 'tho' not after their manner.' οὐ belongs not to the sentence, but to the phrase, which is parenthetical in tone. Unabbreviated, ὁμολογοίην ἂν εἶναι ῥήτωρ, οὐ μὲν κατὰ τούτους, ἀλλ' ὅμως.

3. ἔτη . . . ἐβδομήκοντα: Index, Σωκράτης.

4. τῷ ὄντι ξένος: i.e. ξένος in the proper sense of the word, not figuratively as ξένως above. A foreigner or alien might be unable to address the court even in the Attic dialect (φωνή).

7. καὶ . . . τοῦτο . . . δέομαι | δίκαιον ὥς γ' ἐμοὶ δοκῶ: divide thus in reading, likewise in translating. δίκαιον, while rhetorically emphatic (first word in the group), is grammatically a predicate-adjective. See the following note.

11. αὕτη ἀρετή: sc. ἐστίν. The subject αὕτη, by assimilation of gender; for τοῦτο, i.e. τὸ τοῦτ' αὐτὸ σκοπεῖν κτλ. There is no ambiguity in the assimilated form of expression; ἀρετή must be predicative, otherwise the article would be required, with οὗτος, ὅδε, ἐκείνος, in prose.

Two sets of accusations there are, he affirms, and two companies of accusers, the old and the new—not merely the formidable Anytus and his friends, but the far more formidable ORIGINAL ACCUSERS. These have had the ear of the Athenian public, of the men who now sit in judgment, from childhood up. Many in number, intangible and nameless (barring a comic poet or two), impossible to bring to book, they, whether in jealousy and malice, or themselves believing what they said, have described “one Socrates, a wise man, given to meteoric and subterranean enquiries, a perverter of right reason.” They have classed the defendant with those philosophers who are thought to disbelieve in gods. He asks the judges, then, to concede the twofold scheme; and he claims the right, in pleading his cause, to deal first with the charges that were first pre-

4. πολλοί and πάλαι πολλὰ ἤδη ἔτη οὐδὲν ἀληθὲς λέγοντες are attributives of κατήγοροι, connected by καί. Not so in English. 'Many have there been to bring accusation, and these many years has the slandering gone on.' Grammatically different below C, where πολλοί and πολὺν χρόνον ἤδη κατηγορηκότες and λέγοντες are predicative in the Greek.

5. πρὸς ὑμᾶς: with κατήγοροι,

not with γεγόνασι. The verb alone forms the predicate.

7. καίπερ . . . δεινούς: not without irony; the ὕστεροι might feel themselves slighted, were they not distinctly recognized as δεινοί. This recognition, however, is virtually retracted below C, οὗτοι . . . οἱ δεινοὶ εἰσὶν μου κατήγοροι.

9. ἐπειθόν τε καὶ κατηγοροῦν: 'pressed unceasingly their criminalations.' For the charges which follow, see the Index, σοφός, σοφιστής, Ἀναξαγόρας, λόγος.

13. οἱ δεινοὶ κτλ.: forms the predicate. Regularly the subject is distinguished from the predicate by the presence of the article with the former, but sometimes, as here, the article is essential to γὰρ ἀκούσαντες ἡγοῦνται τοὺς ταῦτα ζητοῦντας οὐδὲ θεοὺς νομίζειν. ἔπειτά εἰσιν οἷτοι οἱ κατήγοροι πολλοὶ καὶ πολὺν χρόνον ἤδη κατηγορηκότες, ἔτι δὲ καὶ ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ ἡλικίᾳ λέγοντες πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐν ᾗ ἂν μάλιστα ἐπιστεύσατε, παῖδες ὄντες, ἔνιοι δ' ὑμῶν καὶ μειράκια, ἀτεχνῶς ἐρήμην κατηγοροῦντες ἀπολογουμένου οὐδενός. ὁ δὲ πάντων ἀλογώτατον, ὅτι οὐδὲ τὰ ὀνόματα οἷόν τε αὐτῶν εἶδέναι καὶ εἰπεῖν, πλην εἴ τις κωμωδοποιὸς τυγχάνει ὧν ὅσοι δὲ φθόνῳ καὶ διαβολῇ χρώμενοι ὑμᾶς ἀνέπειθον, οἳ δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ πεπεισμένοι ἄλλους πείθοντες, οἷτοι πάντες ἀπορώτατοί εἰσιν· οὐδὲ γὰρ ἀναβιβάσασθαι οἷόν τ' ἐστὶν αὐτῶν ἐνταυθοῖ οὐδ' ἐλέγξαι οὐδένα, ἀλλ' ἀνάγκη ἀτεχνῶς ὥσπερ σκισμαχεῖν ἀπολο-

the meaning of the predicate-noun independently of grammatical structure. They 'are the (truly) formidable accusers with whom I have to deal.' The thought is that all other charges are of comparatively little moment beside that of atheism (below οὐδὲ θεοὺς νομίζειν), here indirectly made.

2. ἔπειτα κτλ.: reverting to the two main points, πολλοί and πάλοι. A consequence of the second point is the depth of the impression made upon the minds of the present judges, who were children or mere boys when they first listened to misrepresentations of Socrates. The Athenian δικαστής must be at least thirty years of age: it was now twenty-four years since the Clouds of Aristophanes, in which Socrates was caricatured, had been presented to the public (423 B.C.); and he must have been at that time already well known and much talked of.

6. ἐρήμην κτλ.: Index, δίκη.

9. ὅσοι . . . ἀνέπειθον: contrasted with the κωμωδοποιοί, who were neither unknown nor animated by jealousy and malice.

10. οἳ δὲ ('others') . . . ἄλλους ('more') πείθοντες: enlarges and corrects the main statement. Cp. ἔνιοι δὲ . . . μειράκια, above C.

13. σκισμαχεῖν: a fanciful counterpart of the proceedings at a δίκη ἐρήμη. Here it is the defendant who presents himself at court, but he is bound to lose his case, vestigation, sophistry, teaching of the same to other men." The judges have seen it all with their own eyes, represented in a play now famous—one "Socrates" suspended in mid-air, prating of aerial matters whereof the real Socrates knows nothing—without offense to anybody who does understand them, be it said. Many of his judges have listened to his conversations. If any have heard him utter a word upon subjects of this nature at any time, let them become witnesses to their fellows. — They are silent! He points at the inference to be drawn from this reticent demeanor.

8. Περιφερόμενον: ἐπὶ κρεμάθρας (hanging basket) Ar. Clouds 218; ἀπὸ τραπεζῆς (crate, basket),
 ib. 226.

8. ἀεροβατεῖν: ἀεροβατῶ καὶ περιφρονῶ τὸν ἥλιον Ar. Clouds 225.

11. περὶ τῶν τοιούτων: i.e. τῶν τε ὑπὸ γῆς καὶ οὐρανίων. Below 26 E, where the tone is not exactly the same as the irony of the present passage, astronomical views of Anaxagoras are spoken of as ἄτοπα.

12. μὴ πως . . . φύγοιμι: he prays fervently not to be called to account on so grave a charge as that—for offending in some way the philosophers of the day;
 even as the poets, politicians, etc., feeling themselves aggrieved have employed Meletus to call him to account. Index, φεύγειν.

12. δίκας: the plural here, to avoid too specific an application of the meaning of the word.
 Generalizing Plural.

2. μάρτυρας: Predicate-substantive.

3. διδάσκειν τε καὶ φράζειν: cp. ἔπειθον τε καὶ κατηγοροῦν 18 B. Other similar couplets 20 A, 28 E, 29 C, D, E.

5. οἱ τοιοῦτοι: i.e. οἱ ἀκηκοότες μου διαλεγομένου. In English we should be apt to invert the subject and predicate of the Greek sentence, 'Many of you are of the number.'

7. ἐκ τούτου: i.e. from the fact that not one of the judges speaks up to cite a case of such talk on the part of Socrates. An effective dramatic touch.

7. τοιαῦτα: i.e. in like manner not to be substantiated by explicit evidence. The frequent occurrence of τοιούτος here marks the informal conversational manner.

8. τᾶλλα κτλ.: covers the vague popular reproach τὸν ἥττω λόγον κρείττω ποιῶν 18 B, 19 B.

19 D-20 C

Likewise the allegation that he undertakes to educate men and receives pay therefor, this also he declares untrue — again no offense to any distinguish educator who may be competent to convey the art of a successful life to grateful and enthusiastic youth. The possessor of such skill (with its emoluments) the defendant pronounces happy. Socrates would feel proud if he himself possessed it.

9. Οὐδέ γε: 'no indeed, nor.' For οὐδέ following οὔτε see the Index.

11. ἐπεὶ: 'for'. ἐπεὶ attaches to something like καὶ οὐχ ὡς ἀτιμάζων λέγω κτλ. 19 C, to be mentally supplied. The tone of the two passages is the same. Compare καὶ τοῦτό γε with τὴν τοιαύτην ἐπιστήμην; εἴ τις οἷός τ' εἴη with εἴ τις . . . σοφός ἐστιν.

1. εἰ . . . εἴη: see note on Crit. 46 B.

4. τοὺς νέους κτλ.: '(taking) the young men, etc. The speaker had in mind some such thought as παιδεύειν δύναται when he began the sentence and had got as far as τοὺς νέους, but he is diverted therefrom by a new consideration that intervenes (οἷς ἔξεστι κτλ.), growing out of his mention of the itinerant character of the sophist's profession (ἕκαστος . . . εἰς ἑκάστην):

6. τούτους πείθουσιν: 'they prevail upon the young men (I say).'

7. σφίσιν: 'with them,' the sophists. Emphasized by the contrast with ἐκείνων, τῶν ἑαυτῶν πολιτῶν.

8. ἐπεὶ: elliptical, as above 19 E. Gorgias and Hippias need not fancy themselves the only wise men in the world, 'for,' etc.

8. ἐνθάδε: in Athens.

9. ἐγώ: 'I myself.'

9. ἔτυχον κτλ.: differently in the Protagoras Socrates, in company with a young friend Hippocrates, goes to the house of Callias on purpose to see and hear the great sophist Protagoras, who was stopping there at the time.

12. ἦν δ' ἐγώ: Index, ἦν.

Ἵπολάβοι ἂν οὖν τις ὑμῶν ἴσως· Ἀλλ', ὦ Σώκρατες,

1. ὅς ἔμελλεν . . . ποιήσῃν: assimilation of ὅς ποιήσει (Final Relative clause of Purpose) to the past form of the sentence. This is regularly done as here by means of the periphrastic future with μέλλειν. Index, μέλλειν. With ἀνθρωπίνη τε καὶ πολιτικὴ ἀρετὴ compare Aristotle's ἀνθρωπος φύσει πολιτικὸν ('social') ζῷον Pol. I. 2. 9.

8. Εὐηνος . . . Πάριος, πέντε μῶν: thus it appears, from the business-like reply of Callias, that a Parian variety of ἀρετὴ πολιτικὴ could be had for about $85.50.

10. ἔχοι . . . διδάσκει: the past phase of ἔχει . . . διδάσκει. Ob- jective Conditional clause.

11. οὕτως ἐμμελῶς: with irony, 'so perfectly in tune'; i.e. so cheaply.

20 C-21 A

He will explain (and if the explanation seem an extraordinary one, his hearers must bear with him, for there is somewhat more than the mere word of the defendant to vouch for its truth) how the name and blame of "wise man" have indeed come of a certain sort of wisdom after all — not that arrogated by the sophists, but a kind of wisdom really attainable by man. Herein, the God of Delphi had declared that no man was wiser than Socrates.

τὸ σὸν τί ἐστὶ πρᾶγμα ; πόθεν αἱ διαβολαί σοι αὐται γεγόνασιν ; οὐ γὰρ δήπου, σοῦ γε οὐδέν τῶν ἄλλων περιτ-

 λήν. ἀκούετε δὴ. | καὶ ἴσως μὲν δόξω τισὶν ὑμῶν παί-ζειν, εὖ μέντοι ἴστε πᾶσαν ὑμῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐρῶ. ἐγὼ 10 γάρ, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, δι' οὐδέν ἄλλ' ἢ διὰ σοφίαν τινὰ τοῦτο τὸ ὄνομά ἐσχηκα. ποίαν δὲ σοφίαν ταύτην ; ἥπερ

1. Τὸ σὸν . . . πρᾶγμα: τὸ σόν is emphasized in the question, conceding a distinction between the activity of Socrates and that of the philosophers in general and of the sophists, with all of whom he affirms that he has nothing in common.

2. οὐ γὰρ δήπου . . . γέγονεν:
 'all this talk has not arisen, of course, without any gratuitous proceeding on your part.' The Greek sentence, by its order, is more forcible than the English paraphrase, and it is more pointed than it would have been if a conditional form of statement had been chosen. σοῦ . . . πραγματευομένου is put as a fact (οὐδέν, not μηδέν): incompatible therewith (thereon, ἔπειτα) is the admitted fact, τοσαύτη φήμη τε καὶ λόγος γέγονεν.

2. περιττώτερον: Socrates might not be a sophist or a philosopher of the ordinary stamp, nevertheless there was an unmistakable odor of superfluity about him as compared with men in general.

8. ἀκούετε δὴ: note (here and in what follows) the deliberateness, the tact and caution, the apparent hesitation,—in other words, the dramatic skill so characteristic of Plato's Apology, with which the great paradox of the Socratic wisdom is introduced, expounded step by step, and set forth finally in all its solemn significance.

11. ποίαν δὲ σοφίαν ταύτην:
 the accusative case, under the influence of διὰ above. That σοφίαν is predicative is shown by the absence of the article.
 See the note on αὕτη ἀρετή 18 A.
 An expanded ποία δὲ σοφία αὕτη δι' ἣν ἔσχηκα would be far from idiomatic. The Greek attains to this forcible succinctness of expression thro' the facility and clearness with which it can distinguish predicate-noun from subject or object, in all cases and constructions. Cp. below Ε, οὐ γὰρ ἐμὸν . . . τὸν λόγον, and again εἰς ἀξιοχρεῶν . . . τὸν λέγοντα. Also ἱκανὸν . . . λέγω 31 C, and the note.

1. κινδυνεύω: see the Index.

6. καὶ μοι κτλ.: he resumes his cautious exposition. What immediately precedes, οὗτοι δὲ τάχ' ἄν κτλ., was a momentary digression, designed not merely as a thrust at the sophists, but to help in deprecating any seeming arrogance on the part of Socrates regarding the σοφία which he attributes to himself. Later he says, ἡ ἀνθρωπίνη σοφία ὀλίγον τινὸς ἀξία ἐστὶν καὶ οὐδενός 23 A.

9. τῆς . . . ἐμήης, εἰ δὴ τίς ἐστὶν σοφία: cp. Dem. 18. 20 ἢ τῶν ἄλλων Ἑλλήνων εἴτε χρη κακίαν εἴτ' ἀγνοίαν εἴτε καὶ ἀμφότερα ταῦτ' εἰπεῖν. This may be regarded, grammatically, as an attraction of the substantive into the subordinate clause, with the necessary adaptation of the case construction. Rhetorically, in both examples, the irregularity is produced by a desire to avoid the plain speaking that might give offense (μεγαληγορία, on the part of Socrates).

10. Χαιρεφῶντα . . ., ἴστε: Index, εἰδέναι.

11. ἐμὸς ἐταῖρός τε ἦν . . . καὶ ὑμῶν τῷ πλήθει ξυνέφυγε κτλ.: Index, φυγή, κατελθεῖν. The remark made (note τὲ . . . καί) as if in ὑμῶν τῇ πλήθει ξυνέφυγε τὴν φυγὴν ταύτην καὶ μεθ' ὑμῶν κατήλθε. καὶ ἴστε δὴ οἷος ἦν Χαιρεφῶν, ὡς σφοδρὸς ἐφ' ὃ τι ὁρμήσειε. καὶ δὴ ποτε καὶ εἰς Δελφούς ἐλθὼν ἐτόλμησε τοῦτο μαντεύσασθαι (καί, ὅπερ λέγω, 5 μὴ θορυβεῖτε, ὦ ἄνδρες). ἤρετο γὰρ δὴ, εἴ τις ἐμοῦ εἴη σοφώτερος. ἀνείλεν οὖν ἡ Πυθία μηδένα σοφώτερον εἶναι. καὶ τούτων πέρι ὁ ἀδελφὸς ὑμῶν αὐτοῦ οὐτοσί μαρτυρήσει, ἐπειδὴ ἐκεῖνος τετελεύτηκεν.

B Σκέψασθε δὲ ὧν ἔνεκα ταῦτα λέγω. μέλλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς 10 διδάξειν, ὅθεν μοι ἡ διαβολὴ γέγονεν ταῦτα γὰρ ἐγὼ

the remembrance of Chaerephon there were a link of sympathy between the accused and his judges. —In Chaerephon both sides really had something in common. Thus, as Socrates could pardon the extravagant zeal of his life-long friend, so the court, representative of the youthful and rather self-conscious Restored Democracy, would be led to reflect that Chaerephon the Socratic had his redeeming features. The speaker would need his utmost tact at this highly critical stage of the exposition. Captatio benevolentiae. See the Index, Χαιρεφῶν.

How, then, out of that oracular response the calumnies and all this odium have grown, the defendant bids his judges mark.

He would solve the divine riddle, and with much misgiving he devised a way. Conscious of no wisdom in himself, he would go out and show forth the wisdom of other men, thus putting the oracle to the test, even as it were to prove it untrue. But lo!—his visits, one by one, to those reputed great and wise, revealed the fact that they knew not their own ignorance, while Socrates knew well that he knew nothing. In so far was he indeed wiser than they.—But of each man thus exposed he made an enemy; likewise, of many a one that had witnessed the exposure.

9. Σκέψασθε κτλ. : he reminds them of the judicial motive of his recital, ὑμῖν πειράσσομαι ἀποδείξαι, τί ποτ' ἐστὶν τοῦτο ὃ ἐμοὶ πεποιήκεν τό τε ὄνομα καὶ τὴν διαβολήν 20 D.

ἀκούσας ἐνεθυμούμην οὕτωςί· Τί ποτε λέγει ὁ θεός, καὶ τί ποτε αἰνίττεται ; ἐγὼ γὰρ δὴ οὔτε μέγα οὔτε σμικρὸν ξύννοῖδα ἐμαυτῷ σοφὸς ὢν· τί οὖν ποτε λέγει, φάσκων ἐμὲ σοφώτατον εἶναι ; οὐ γὰρ δὴ πον ψεύδεται γε· οὐ γὰρ θέ-

1. οὕτωςί: i.e. as in the self-questioning that follows. Characteristic of Socrates is the dialogue with himself; cp. πρὸς ἐμαυτὸν ἐλογιζόμην below D.

2. οὔτε μέγα οὔτε σμικρὸν: with σοφός. As above, ταύτην σοφός, σοφίαν σοφοί 20 D.

3. λέγει φάσκων: Index, λέγειν.

7. ἦλθον: Explanatory Asyndeton (i.e. omission of the usual γάρ), referring to τοιαύτην τινά. In the same way below, ἔδοξέ μοι

21 C, referring to τοιοῦτόν τι; and again, οἱ μὲν . . . εὐδοκιμοῦντες κτλ. 22 A. Also 22 D.

11. πρὸς ὃν . . . ἔπαθον: for πρὸς in this connection see Index, πάσχειν.

13. ἔδοξέ μοι: 'I came to believe.' The same Ingressive Aorist below, ταῦτα . . . ἔδοξε D; 22 A and D. Cp. ἀπηχθόμην 21 E.

18. τούτου μὲν: cp. τούτου γε below. The emphasis with μὲν consists in marking τούτου as the σοφώτερός εἰμι· κινδυνεύει μὲν γὰρ ἡμῶν οὐδέτερος οὐδὲν καλὸν κάγαθὸν εἶδέναι, ἀλλ' οὗτος μὲν οἶεταί τι εἶδέναι οὐκ εἰδώς, ἐγὼ δέ, ὥσπερ οὖν οὐκ οἶδα, οὐδὲ οἶομαι. ἔοικα γοῦν τούτου γε σμικρῷ τινι αὐτῷ τούτῳ 5 σοφώτερος εἶναι, ὅτι ἂ μὴ οἶδα οὐδὲ οἶομαι εἶδέναι. — ἐντεῦθεν ἐπ' ἄλλον ἦα τῶν ἐκείνου δοκούντων σοφωτέρων εἶναι, καί μοι ταῦτα ταῦτα ἔδοξε· καὶ ἐνταῦθα κάκείνῳ καὶ ἄλλοις πολλοῖς ἀπηχθόμην.

first person in a series; others are to be examined later. The second step in the series is marked by ἐντεῦθεν (ἐπ' ἄλλον ἦα).

2. οὐδὲν καλὸν κάγαθόν: Index, καλός. — As far as positive knowledge was concerned, what either Socrates or the candidate had to show was nothing great. But negatively, in self-criticism, without which no man can lay claim to the possession of σοφία; and in freedom from conceit of knowledge, and hence from error, Socrates was the superior.

4. σμικρῷ τινι αὐτῷ τούτῳ σοφώτερος: 'a trifle wiser just here,' wiser by σμικρόν τι αὐτὸ τοῦτο, viz. ὅτι ἂ μὴ οἶδα κτλ.

5. οὐδὲ οἶομαι εἶδέναι: cp. above, οὐδὲ οἶομαι. See Index, οὐδέ.

21 E-22 C

Painful was the task thus divinely indicated; but, once begun, the toil must go on — and, as he wandered, it proved (the defendant solemnly affirms) a more than Herculean labor to shake the oracle's irrefutable truth. The greater men's repute for wisdom, the less of the real wisdom were they found to have. Even as the public men, so the poets wrought not with reasoned knowledge; while, because as poets they were accomplished and great in their unconscious art, they deemed themselves all-wise. Thus again were they less wise than Socrates.

10. Ὅτι ἀπηχθανόμην: with αἰσθανόμενος.

11. περὶ πλείστου: 'of supreme

1. νῆ τὸν κύνα: such oaths afforded a convenient way of avoiding the too frequent mention of the deity. Similar devices in modern speech are familiar enough. They often convey a tone of irony, as here.

6. τὸ φρονίμως ἔχειν: i.e. the conscious intellectual state and critical exercise of reason. A noteworthy variation of τὸ σοφὸς εἶναι, τὸ εἰδέναι τι, in the Socratic sense.

7. δεῖ δὴ κτλ.: the farther he got in his travels the more laborious became his efforts to avoid failure in the original undertaking (ὡς ἐλέγξων τὸ μαντεῖον 21 C).

7. ὥσπερ πόρους τινὰς: 'as it were a round of labors.' The phrase is pointed by its suggestion of the familiar tale of Hercules, hence ὥσπερ and τινὰς.

8. ποιοῦντος: the genitive is adapted to the possessive τὴν ἐμὴν.

8. ἵνα μή κτλ.: 'to the end that I might not find the oracular response quite (καὶ) irrefutable.' The purpose of πόρους ποιοῦντος.

14. ἢ ἅμα τι καὶ κτλ.: while showing forth their knowledge he would also acquire somewhat of it for himself ('kill two birds with one stone"). A Socratic trait is here noted, yet not without the usual irony.

1. αὐτῶν: 'than they'; with βέλτιον. αὐτῶν by its position within the phrase ὀλίγου ἅπαντες οἱ παρόντες escapes emphasis, while the phrase itself gains in prominence. See the note on δεινὸν . . . λέγειν 17 B.

10. τὴν ποίησιν: not their poetry, but the making of poetry, their poetic faculty. — To Plato, poetic inspiration was as far as possible removed from τὸ φρονίμως ἔχειν; for, so long as the poet was inspired, reason was absent. And here the Platonic Socrates is farther led to note that poets are by no means assured by their peculiar gift against a false conceit.

Finally, he found that those versed in special arts were indeed thereby wiser than himself, each with his peculiar knowledge, whereof the defendant possessed no sort; yet, since they would extend their claim to wisdom far beyond their sphere of skill, that which they really had was thus outweighed and clouded. — So, when he asked himself whether, in order to win their learning, he would assume their folly, he was forced to answer, No!

first question is not of εἰδέναι, but of ἐπίσταςθαι, to know how. Their ἐπιστήμη, the understanding of certain definite rules and principles consciously and rationally applied to the practice of some particular τέχνη, is conceded to be a positive σοφία. Accordingly, of the three classes into which the Athenian community is roughly divided, the artisans are ranked highest in the scale of knowledge. Of those previously examined the first class, the πολιτικοί, had not got beyond sheer empiricism; while the power of the ποιηταί, the second class, was in-born and unreasoned: both were devoid even of positive σοφία.

4.4. ταύτη: 'in this way,' i.e. on the positive side.

8. τὰ μέγιστα: especially τὰ ἀνθρώπινά τε καὶ πολιτικά, cp.

20 B. It was because matters pertaining to the well-being of the community at large were popularly regarded as the most important subjects of knowledge that Socrates in his tour of examination went first to the πολιτικοί, who were believed to be versed therein above other men.

8. αὕτη ἡ πλημμέλεια. κτλ.: the absence of the negative, or peculiarly Socratic, σοφία is equivalent to downright ἀμαθία. It is a 'false note,' destructive of harmony in the entire man, and against it a trifle of technical knowledge could avail him nothing. Socrates is thus forced to give the preference to his own mental condition, which involves nothing false or discordant.—The opposite of πλημμέλεια is ἐμμέλεια, cp. ἐμμελῶς, 20 C.

Precisely here, in this array of questioning, he reminds his judges, lies the source, not merely of the deep-seated enmity and its attendant calumnies, but also of the name of "wise." Men suppose the examiner to possess that knowledge wherein the examined are found wanting — forgetting that God only KNOWS; wherefore the oracle, employing the name of Socrates, would indicate the true and proper attitude of man toward wisdom.

—So, not concerns of city or of household, but the probing and testing of men's minds — this thing still claims his whole devotion, as servant of the divine will.

5. Οἶαι . . . βαρύταται: οἶος with the superlative, like ὥς or ὅτι. 'The gravest possible.'

7. ὄνομα . . . τοῦτο λέγομαι: i.e. τοῦτο ὀνομάζομαι (ὄνομα λέγομαι). 'I am thus designated.'

7. οἴονται κτλ.: if, for example, in attempting to frame a definition of ἀρετή or of δικαιοσύνη, a man was confuted and reduced to silence through his own replies to the questions put to him, the bystanders, who had no conception of the purely negative attitude assumed by Socrates, concluded that he could himself give a complete account of ἀρετή or of δικαιοσύνη, if he chose to do so.

9. τὸ δὲ: 'in fact, however.' Cp. τὸ μέγιστον 41 B, τὸ τοῦ Ὁμήρου 34 D. These phrases are adverbial in character, serving as it were to announce what follows in explanation of them.

9. τῷ ὄντι: 'really.' — Here, finally, Plato reverts to the usual and proper meaning of σοφός, a word of essentially positive signification, and interprets the great paradox in 'clear and most impressive language.

ὄντι ὁ θεὸς σοφὸς εἶναι, καὶ ἐν τῷ χρησμῷ τούτῳ τοῦτο λέγειν, ὅτι ἡ ἀνθρωπίνη σοφία ὀλίγου τινὸς ἀξία ἐστὶν καὶ οὐδενός· καὶ φαίνεται τοῦτ' οὐ λέγειν τὸν Σωκράτη, προσκεχρησθαι δὲ τῷ ἐμῷ ὀνόματι, ἐμὲ παράδειγμα 5 ποιοῦμενος, ὥσπερ ἂν εἰ εἶποι, ὅτι Οὗτος ὑμῶν, ὃ ἀνθρω-

2. ὀλίγου τινός . . . καὶ οὐδε-νός: Index, τίς.

3. τοῦτ' οὐ λέγειν τὸν Σωκράτη: τοῦτο, viz. σοφὸν εἶναι.
 The Double Accusative with λέγειν.
 Cp. above, τοῦτο λέγομαι, where the accusative of the person is represented by the subject of the passive verb. — It is now seen (φαίνεται), the speaker says, that the oracle does not mean to assert literally of Socrates that he is σοφός (τῷ ὄντι γὰρ ὁ θεὸς σοφός ἐστίν), but employs the name of Socrates merely for the sake of illustrating the negative principle enunciated.

severally to avenge the grievances of each class in the community. — Here is the truth and the whole truth, the defendant declares, about the calumnies. Let the judges who have heard it thus plainly spoken look into their own hearts for its confirmation.

1. Ἐπακολουθοῦντες . . . αὐτόματοι: i.e. their following was not

tes. Herein he contrasts himself with the sophists. See 19 E,

4. εἶτα: 'so.' Their imitating consists, or rather issues (εἶτα), in their essaying to examine people.

8. Σωκράτης τις: cp. 18 B.

1. ἐκ τούτων κτλ.: the outcome of all this is the present systematic attack, in judicial form. Cp. ἡ . . . διαβολή, ἥ δὴ καὶ πιστεύων Μελητός κτλ. 19 B.

4. τῶν ῥητόρων: i.e. τῶν πολιτικῶν. — The fiction of allowing the prosecutors to stand severally as representatives of the three classes into which, for purposes of exposition, the Athenian community has been divided, serves admirably to afford an easy transition from the "original" to the real accusers, and is otherwise highly effective. See the names in the Index.

5. ὅπερ . . . ἔλεγον: see 19 A.

7. ταῦτα . . . τάληθῃ: 'here you have the truth' as promised above, ὑμεῖς δ' ἐμοῦ ἀκούσεσθε πᾶσαν τὴν ἀλήθειαν 17 B. The remark applies to all that precedes in the defendant's plea.

8. ὑμᾶς οὔτε . . . μικρόν: Double Accusative with ἀποκρυψάμενος and ὑποστειλάμενος. For the position of ἐγὼ λέγω, see the note on δεινὸν . . . λέγειν 17 B; also that on αὐτῶν 22 B.

10. τοῖς αὐτοῖς τούτοις: 'for this very reason'; τούτοις, i.e. τῷ μηδὲν ἀποκρύψασθαι μηδὲ ὑποστείλασθαι.

11. δ: τὸ ἀπεχθάνεσθαι ὑμῖν.

11. τεκμήριον κτλ.: the judges can verify Socrates' account by the feelings which it has stirred within them as they listened.

12. αὕτη: 'even as I have described it.' αὕτη and ταῦτα are predicative. Note the chiasmic arrangement, αὕτη . . . ἡ διαβολή >< τὰ αἷτια ταῦτα. The main

Β ταῦτά ἐστιν. καὶ ἐάν τε νῦν ἐάν τε αὖθις ζητήσητε ταῦτα, οὕτως εὐρήσετε.

Ὅτι μὲν δὴ ἔγκλημα τοιοῦτόν ἐστιν. τούτου δὲ τοῦ ἐγκλήματος ἐν ἑκαστον ἐξετάσωμεν. φησὶ γὰρ δὴ τοὺς νέους emphasis is upon the pronoun, but the emphasis is shifted to τὰ αἷτια, which comes forward as a direct suggestion from ἡ διαβολή. 'Such the calumny, its causes such.'

24 B, C

Enough for the misrepresentations of the past. Now for these latter-day accusers, with their high-minded spokesman, — whose indictment reads, "A corrupter of the youth of Athens, a denier of her gods." — First, then, it is against the charge of corrupting the youth that he must defend his life — a charge preferred thus lightly by Meletus, who (as shall be shown forth) never laid to heart its meaning.

7. Ὡσπερ . . . κατηγορῶν: cp.

above 19 B, ὥσπερ οὖν κατηγορῶν . . . αὐτῶν. Here, the words ἐτέρων κατηγορῶν are predicative: 'just as if Meletus and Co. (τούτων) were really a second set of prosecutors.' The speaker will not suffer his telling fiction of the πρῶτοι κατήγοροι to be forgotten for a moment.

7. λάβωμεν αὖ: see 19 B, ἀναλάβωμεν κτλ.

8. ἔχει δέ πως ᾧδε: the exact words of the indictment are not reproduced (πως). Similarly Xen. Mem. I. I. I, ἡ γραφή τοιάδε τις ἦν. In substance, Xenophon's statement is the same as Plato's. See the Introduction, p. 35, note. — Below 26 B, the highly significant word διδάσκειν is apparently attributed to the indictment.

12. φησί: 'he asserts.'

ἀδικεῖν με διαφθείροντα. ἐγὼ δέ γε, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀδικεῖν φημι Μέλητον, ὅτι σπουδῇ χαριεντίζεται, ῥαδίως εἰς ἀγῶνα καθιστὰς ἀνθρώπους, περὶ πραγμάτων προσποιούμενος σπουδάζειν καὶ κήδεσθαι, ὧν οὐδὲν τούτῳ πάποτε ἐμέλησεν. ὥς δὲ τοῦτο οὕτως ἔχει, πειράσσομαι καὶ ὑμῖν ἐπιδείξαι.

1. ἐγὼ δέ γε . . . φημί: 'and I assert.' Note the repetition also of ἀδικεῖν.

2. σπουδῇ χαριεντίζεται: this is a very serious kind of pleasantry, says the defendant, little short of an indictable offense (ἀδικεῖν φημι) in itself—lightly putting men on trial for their lives, while naming as subjects of accusation matters of which the accuser can give no rational account. Plato is about to show us Meletus, προσποιούμενον μὲν εἶδέναι τι, εἰδῶτα δὲ οὐδέν. His blundering is ironically termed χαριεντίζεσθαι; and, with satirical humor, playing upon the prosecutor's name, Plato charges him with not caring, instead of not knowing, what he is talking about (τὴν Μελήτῳ ἀμίλειαν).

5. τούτῳ: not αὐτῷ. In legal parlance "the other party" is constantly designated as present in court—pointed at with the finger as it were (οὗτος, οὗτοςί, — thus the judges themselves are οὗτοι). Cp. above B, τὴν τούτων ἀνθρωμοσίαν, not αὐτῶν τὴν ἀνθρωμοσίαν.

Differently 19 B (τὴν ἀνθρωμοσίαν . . . αὐτῶν) of the πρῶτα κατηγοροί, who could not, in the nature of things, be personally in evidence.

6. καὶ ὑμῖν: i.e. he will try to make the fact as clear to the judges as it is to the speaker's own mind (καί).

In the scene that follows, the counterpart of many a real Socratic ἐξέτασις, Meletus represents the candidate for honors in σοφία, while the judges and the spectators in the court-room stand for the παρόντες (22 B, 23 A). Or again, to go one step farther, the candidate may be said to represent, not any particular class in any particular community, but the whole community of the world of fools; the παρόντες, the readers of Plato, thro' all the generations.

For the dialogue here introduced by Plato into the Apology, see the Index, δίκη (ἐρώτησις).

Is an animal improved in the handling of it by everybody, except only one person who spoils it?—What, no answer? Well, no indeed, of course not. Only the young MEN of Athens can claim that happiness.*

3. Τούτοις: τοῖς δικασταῖς. So below, εἰς τουτουσί. See the note on τούτῳ 24 C.

4. μέλον γέ σοι: 'what you care so much about.' Assuming that you are interested in this subject, the defendant says to his prosecutor, and have studied it with sufficient care to have discovered that in truth I am the one who corrupts the youth of Athens, then you surely must know something about those who do not corrupt, but improve them.

10. οἱ νόμοι: by this reply Meletus attempts to evade the question, which he is so reluctant to answer at all, as he foresees that οἱ ἀμείνους ποιοῦντες τοὺς νέους must be made to include a very large portion of the community, if he is to justify his attack upon Socrates in particular as διαφθείροντα αὐτούς.

1. οὗτοι . . . οἱ δικασταί: Meletus, who cannot of course answer the question by naming a new individual, seizes upon the nearest set of persons at hand for his reply, guided partly by the suggestion in τοὺς νόμους. For Plato, this is an opportunity to score the worthy judges in passing (πῶς λέγεις, εὖ γε, πολλὴν ἀφθονίαν).

20. ἐὰν . . . οὐ φῆτε: Index, φάναι. The play upon the name (Μέλητε, ἀμέλειαν, μεμέληκεν) has already occurred above 24 C D (twice), and is repeated below 26 B. Not merely this word-play, but also the very frequent ὦ Μέλητε, and especially the famil-

lar. and the intensified vocative phrases (ὦ πρὸς Διὸς Μέλητε, ὦ τάν, ὦ ἀγαθέ, ὦ θαυμάσιε Μέλητε, ὦ φίλε Μέλητε, ὦ ἄριστε ἀνδρῶν) help to sustain the tone of irony and satire.

4. ἐφρόντισας: a highly significant variation of ἐμέλησέ σοι. Index, φροντίζειν, φρόνησις.

Q. Is it true that we are harmed by bad neighbors, and helped by good ones? A. Ay. Q. Is there any man who had rather be harmed than helped? A. Nay. Q. Do you accuse Socrates of making the young men bad willingly, or unwillingly? A. Willingly. Q. Is Socrates, then, so ignorant as not to know that if he makes a bad man of his neighbor he is likely to be harmed by him?—hence, can MEAN to do this mischief?—Nay, such ignorance is inconceivable on his part. Therefore, if he corrupts the youth, he corrupts them without meaning to do so; and should be taught better, not prosecuted at law.

1. Τηλικούτου . . . τηλικόσδε: contrasting the ages of the two men, supposed to be seen together in the court-room.

5. μοχθηρὸν ποιήσω: i.e. διαφθείρω (διαφθεῖραι); cp. above D, πονηροτέρους ποιῶντα.

6. κακὸν . . . λαβεῖν: i.e. κακῶς παθεῖν, hence ὑπό. Cp. 17 A, ὑπ' αὐτῶν . . . ἐπελαθόμεν.

7. ὥστε . . . ἐκὼν ποιῶ: as result of ἀγνοεῖν.

8. ταῦτα: 'herein'; Cognate Accusative.

9. ἀλλ' ἢ οὐ . . . ἢ . . . ἄκων: excluding a third term ἐκὼν διαφθείρω, because ignorance on the part of Socrates that he would be likely to suffer harm at the hands of one corrupted by him is inconceivable.—Here the validity of another characteristic doctrine of Socrates is assumed—a paradox only second in importance to that of the Socratic wisdom itself, viz. the identity of virtue and knowledge. Plato was bound to introduce it, not merely for the sake of rendering his picture of the master complete and consistent, but also to afford the connecting link between the intellectual and the moral side of the Apology.

10. κατ' ἀμφοτέρα: i.e. in either case. To be impaled upon one horn of a dilemma is to be at the mercy of both horns.

11. τοιούτων: i.e. ἀκουσίων.

11. ἀμαρτημάτων: Genitive of the Charge. Index, εἰσάγειν.

12. νόμος . . . ἐστίν: see the Index.

Β ἐστίν, ὃ ἐγὼ ἔλεγον, ὅτι Μελήτω τούτων οὔτε μέγα οὔτε

3. κολάσεως . . . οὐ μαθήσεως : although the notions of διδάσκειν, νοθετεῖν, κολάζειν had not in the time of Plato, and have not even at the present day, come to be practically and universally recognized as all alike essential to the idea of punishment, this fact nowise invalidates the profound truth underlying the doctrine, οὐδεὶς ἐκὼν ἁμαρτάνει. — The true criminal, willing to do a thing known to be κακόν, who will, for example, deliberately lead the young into ways of crime—such a man, deficient in that sense which enables better men instinctively to feel that what is bad for others is bad for themselves also, stands so low in the scale of intelligence as to need κόλασις. He cannot be set aright by mere instruction, but he must be taught better by forcible means (to the extent even of cutting short, if need be, his existence as an individual), for the protection and improvement of humanity as a whole, as well as to check the folly of the offender himself. Very different is the case of those who know enough to avoid doing what is bad, but might not always be sure whether what they are doing is bad or good. They can be set aright through μάθησις. Socrates is one of the latter sort. If his conversation with young men is harmful to them in any way, he is unaware of it. Show him how it is harmful, and he will refrain from such conversation. Meletus asserts that Socrates is a criminal, making young men bad on purpose, as Meletus himself would not do. That is to say, Socrates is more ignorant than Meletus!

Q. How does Socrates corrupt the youth of Athens? Is it by teaching them to regard other deities than those regarded by the community? A. Most assuredly it is. Q. Pray define your position clearly. Do you mean to say that Socrates inculcates a belief in the existence of gods, only they are not the same gods as those in which the community believes? — or do you μικρὸν πάποτε ἐμέλησεν· ὁμως δὲ δὴ λέγε ἡμῶν, πῶς με φῆς διαφθείρειν, ὦ Μέλητε, τοὺς νεωτέρους; ἡ δὴλον δὴ ὅτι, κατὰ τὴν γραφὴν ἣν ἐγράψω, θεοὺς διδάσκοντα μὴ νομίζειν οὕς ἡ πόλις νομίζει, ἕτερα δὲ δαιμόνια 5 καινά; οὐ ταῦτα λέγεις ὅτι διδάσκων διαφθείρω; Πάνν μὲν οὖν σφόδρα ταῦτα λέγω. assert that he is a DISBELIEVER himself and teaches other men to disbelieve in gods? A. I mean to say that he does not believe in gods at all. Q. What, are not even the sun and moon gods to Socrates? A. No, indeed, he declares that the one is fire, and the other is earth. Q. Ah! Is, then, this court held to be so illiterate as to accept the published doctrines of Anaxagoras as imputations against Socrates? Verily, young people learn from Socrates absurdities which they can promptly expose as plagiarized by him. But, for Heaven's sake, do you imagine that in THIS way he believes in no god at all? A. In none at all, none at all! Q. Now see, there you are, eating your own words — making sport of serious matters, by coming into court just for the fun of finding out whether your wise man Socrates is clever enough to catch you when you contradict yourself.

1. Ὅμως δὲ κτλ.: altho' it is clear, the defendant says, that we are dealing with an accuser who has not qualified himself to give a reasoned account of the subject of accusation, nevertheless the defense must go on.

3. διδάσκοντα: sc. φῆς με διαφθείρειν τοὺς νεωτέρους.

5. ταῦτα: with διδάσκων.

7. ὧν: Objective Genitive with ὁ λόγος, nearly the same in meaning as περὶ ὧν.

9. πότερον: followed by ἢ 'or (whether),' p. 73, l. 1.

12. οὐ μέντοι: sc. νομίζω. The same ellipse occurs with ὅτι ἐτέρους below.

ἔστιν ὁ μοι ἐγκαλεῖς, ὅτι ἐτέρους · ἢ παντάπασί με φῆς οὔτε αὐτὸν νομίζειν θεοὺς τοὺς τε ἄλλους ταῦτα διδάσκειν. Ταῦτα λέγω, ὡς τὸ παράπαν οὐ νομίζεις θεοὺς.
 4 Ὡς θαυμάσιε Μέλητε, ἵνα τί ταῦτα λέγεις; οὐδὲ ἥλιον οὐδὲ σελήνην ἄρα νομίζω θεοὺς εἶναι, ὥσπερ οἱ ἄλλοι ἄνθρωποι; Μὰ Δί', ὦ ἄνδρες δικασταί, ἐπεὶ τὸν μὲν ἥλιον λίθον φησὶν εἶναι, τὴν δὲ σελήνην γῆν. Σωκράτους οἶε κατηγορεῖν, ὦ φίλε Μέλητε, καὶ οὕτω καταφρονεῖς τῶνδε καὶ οἶε αὐτοὺς ἀπίρους γραμμάτων εἶναι,

1. παντάπασι: with οὔτε . . . νομίζειν. Cp. τὸ παράπαν ἄθεός above. For οὔτε . . . τε, see the Index.

3. ταῦτα λέγω κτλ.: Socrates was indicted and executed for ἀσέβεια. The charge of atheism was not contained in the indictment headed by Meletus. This charge, however, had been insinuated often enough by the πρῶτοι κατήγοροι: it formed a part of the popular misunderstanding and misrepresentation of Socrates; see 18 C and 19 D, where it is indirectly rebutted. In order to throw his refutation of the popular charge of atheism into the characteristic form of dialectic, Plato has introduced it into the Apology at this point; representing Meletus as cleverly inveigled by his questioner into the indiscretion of overstepping the strict limits of the writing for which he stands.

4. ἵνα τί: see the Index.

6. ὦ ἄνδρες δικασταί: beguiled by another leading question, Meletus turns with a triumphant air to the judges. The design of Plato in the question (οὐδὲ ἥλιον κτλ.) is to emphasize once more the difference between Socrates and the cosmical philosophers (see 19 C, D), in connection with the mention of Anaxagoras, and at the same time to involve the accuser more deeply than ever in the inconsistency and self-contradiction presently to be exposed. For the form of address, see note on 40 A.

7. Σωκράτους . . . Ἀναξαγόρου κτλ.: you fancy, says the defendant to his prosecutor, that you are accusing Socrates—that the judges take your word for it when you attribute these irreligious doctrines to Socrates; as if they were so unlearned and illiterate as not to be aware that you are really accusing Anaxagoras. This is a sort of contempt of court.

2. καὶ δὴ καὶ κτλ.: strongly ironical. The works of Anaxagoras of Clazomenae may not be on sale at every shop in Athens; but the highest price a copy of his Περὶ Φύσεως will bring is yet low enough to estop Socrates from appropriating its lore — supposing that were not too absurd to be worth pirating.

4. ἐκ τῆς ὀρχήστρας: see the Index.

6. ἄτοπα: Socrates averred, according to Xenophon's report, Mem. 4. 7. 7, that Anaxagoras had gone crazy (παρεφρόνησεν) in his views of the sun and the moon. In general, he declared that the cosmical philosophers stultified themselves in their speculations, ib. I. I. 11 ff.

6. οὕτωςί: with νομίζειν. 'In this way'; i.e. even as Anaxagoras disbelieves. This amounts, however, to saying, 'so completely,' 'utterly.'

8. καὶ ταῦτα μέντοι: 'and that, too.'

12. νεότητι: i.e. in a spirit of recklessness. Index, Μέλητος.

12. ἔοικεν . . . ζυντιθέντι | δια-πειρωμένῳ ἄρα γινώσεται κτλ.: divide thus in reading. Cp. τοῦτο . . .
 δέομαι | δίκαιον ὥς γ' ἐμοὶ δοκῶ 18 A.

13. ζυντιθέντι: Supplementary Participle. For the dative, which results from the essential meaning of εἰκέναι, cp. the construction with ζυντιδέναι 22 D. There the participle is in agreement with ἐμαντῷ; here it is itself substantive.

13. διαπειρωμένῳ: 'to test the question.' Attempt implies purpose; hence usually the imperfect stem πείρώμενος, not the future. Cp. below 27 E, ἀποπειρώμενος.

1. ἐμοῦ: the genitive with γινῶναι follows the analogy of αἰσθάνεσθαι, ἀκοῦιν, etc.

1. χαριεντιζομένου κτλ.: see above 24 C and the note.

5. ἀδικεῖ κτλ.: the self-contradiction presently to be exposed by dialectic means is anticipated in a formula of concise and explicit statement.

27 A-E

Q. Does any man believe in the existence of things human, yet not in that of human beings?—or in things musical, yet not in musicians?—and so on? What, no answer? Well, of course not. Now, is there any man who believes in the existence of things daemonic, yet not in that of daemons? A. There is not. Q. Thank you. How obliging you are, to answer when you cannot help it. Then, since you accuse Socrates of regarding and teaching things daemonic, he must, according to your own account, regard daemons also. But, farther, are the daemons held to be either the offspring of gods or themselves gods? Yes, or No? A. Yes. Q. Well now, if Socrates, as you concede, believes in daemons, then, whether the daemons be gods themselves or only the offspring of gods, in either case he must believe in gods, and you must be pronounced guilty of tomfoolery. That is to say, you either wanted to bring Socrates up here for the purpose of trying his common sense, or you were determined he should be brought up here at any rate, and, since you could find no true charge against him, you set down a blundering lie.

7. Ταῦτα: i.e. τὰ ἐναντία αὐτὸς ἐαυτῷ.

Β κατ' ἀρχὰς ὑμᾶς παρηγησάμην, μέμνησθέ μοι μὴ θορυβεῖν, ἐὰν ἐν τῷ εἰωθότῳ τρόπῳ τοὺς λόγους ποιῶμαι. ἔστιν ὅστις ἀνθρώπων, ὦ Μέλητε, ἀνθρώπεια μὲν νομίζει πράγματ' εἶναι, ἀνθρώπους δὲ οὐ νομίζει; ἀποκρινέσθω, 5 ὦ ἄνδρες, καὶ μὴ ἄλλα καὶ ἄλλα θορυβεῖτω· ἔσθ' ὅστις ἵππους μὲν οὐ νομίζει, ἵππικὰ δὲ πράγματα; ἡ αὐλητὰς μὲν οὐ νομίζει εἶναι, αὐλητικὰ δὲ πράγματα; οὐκ ἔστιν, ὦ ἄριστε ἀνδρῶν· εἰ μὴ σὺ βούλει ἀποκρίνασθαι, ἐγὼ 9 σοι λέγω καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις τουτοισί. ἀλλὰ τὸ ἐπὶ τούτῳ Ὡς ἀπόκριται· ἔσθ' ὅστις δαιμόνια μὲν νομίζει πράγματ' εἶναι, δαίμονας δὲ οὐ νομίζει; Οὐκ ἔστιν. 1. κατ' ἀρχάς: above 17 c.

1. μέμνησθε κτλ.: this formal reminder serves to render the scene more lifelike.

5. μὴ . . . θορυβεῖτω: Meletus manifests his impatience at the questioning process, in view of its inevitable outcome.

9. τὸ ἐπὶ τούτῳ γε: 'the next question.'

13. δαιμόνια: used as a substantive in the indictment; here, with πράγματα, as an adjective; below, more as a substantive. The shift does not vitiate the reasoning.

19. τοὺς δὲ δαίμονας . . . ἡγούμεθα κτλ.: the popular belief is appealed to in an argument directed against one who stands forth as a champion of popular beliefs.

μονες, τοῦτ' ἂν εἴη ὃ ἐγὼ φημί σε αἰνίττεσθαι καὶ

1. αἰνίττεσθαι: see above A, αἶνγμα ξυντιθέντι.

2. θεοὺς οὐχ ἡγούμενον . . . θεοὺς αὖ ἡγείσθαι πάλιν: αὖ πάλιν emphasizes the contradiction; cp. below E, καὶ δαιμόνια καὶ θεῖα ἡγείσθαι, καὶ αὖ μήτε δαίμονας μήτε θεούς. We should be apt to say, at the same time.

4. παῖδες . . . νόθοι: finds its analogue in ἡμιόνους below.

7. ἵππων μὲν παῖδας . . . καὶ ὄνων: predicative; 'as offspring, etc.'

8. τοὺς ἡμιόνους: the article, not merely for grammatical clearness (see the note on ποῖαν δὴ κτλ. 20 D), but as adapted to τοὺς δαίμονας above C, οἱ δαίμονες D (twice). The analogy here introduced constitutes a pointed feature of the sarcasm of the passage.

11. ἢ ἀπορῶν ὃ τι κτλ.: these words present the serious view of Meletus' case.

12. ὅπως δὲ κτλ.: at the close, as at the outset (27 A), of the scene the self-contradiction is summed up in concise and explicit terms.

12. τινὰ . . . ἀνθρώπων: the phrase is strongly put, with so many words intervening. The force of the expression can be rightly appreciated only thro' fluent enunciation by the living voice. Such effects cannot be estimated by the eye, nor can any translation adequately reproduce them to the ear and mind.

1. οὐδεμία μηχανή ἐστιν: 'there is no way of contriving,' i.e. it is impossible to imagine.

However, but few words are needed, the defendant avers, to dispose of Meletus and his little charge. Enough for it. Not to this prosecutor or that prosecutor will Socrates owe his conviction, if conviction come; but to the spiteful throng, which has claimed many a victim in the past, and will yet claim many more.

5. Ἀπολογίας: Predicate-genitive with εἶναι, in meaning nearly the same as if ἔργον were expressed; 'to need no lengthy argument.' The subject of δοκεῖ is the clause, ὥς . . . οὐκ ἀδικῶ.

5. ταῦτα: 24 B-27 E.

5. ὁ δὲ . . . ἔλεγον κτλ.: by reverting to the subject of the πρῶτοι κατηγοροὶ the writer throws the comparatively trivial matter of the formal indictment into the background, and relegates it to a position of inferiority.

8. αἰρήσει . . . αἰρή . . . ἤρηκεν . . . αἰρήσειν: Index, αἰρεῖν. The repetition of the word marks the tone of caustic satire—directed against a civil polity that enabled the irresponsible masses to vent their spite upon great men under the form of law. The present passage is one of many in the Apology which acquired much of their power and solemnity by being written after the sentence of this famous court had been pronounced and executed.

28 B-D

Ay, his course has been a perilous one, he acknowledges; but here is a question, not of danger, but of duty. Where would be the great names, where the heroic spirits of history and song, had they seen fit to hesitate when the question of DUTY arose? The man who is good for anything at all, stands firm at his post, from a sense of honor, taking no account of life and death.

I. Ἴσως δ' ἂν . . . εἴποι τις κτλ. cp. 20 C, ὑπολάβοι ἂν οὖν τις κτλ. Here, as there, the supposed interrogatory affords an easy transition from negative to positive, from defense (ἀπολογία) to exposition (διήγησις).

6. ἐκεῖνο: illud, i.e. the memorable thing that follows. Differently (more lightly) above 18 A, τοῦτο σκοπεῖν.

responds, αὐτίκα τεθναίην, ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἄρ' ἐμελλον ἐταίρῳ | κτεινομένῳ ἐπαμύναι . . . | ἀλλ' ἦμαι παρὰ νηυσὶν ἐτώσιον ἄχθος ἀρούρης, | κτλ. Σ 95-104. Index, Θέτις; Πάτροκλος.

1. εἰ τιμωρήσεις . . . καὶ . . . ἀποκτενεῖς: note the admonitory tone of the Real Condition of the Future.

6. αὐτίκα: the response is pointedly adapted to the warning by the repetition of this word.

8. μὴ . . . οἶε: 'do you imagine?' Index, μή.

13. πρὸ τοῦ αἰσχροῦ: cp. above C, παρὰ τὸ αἰσχρόν τι ὑπομείναι. 'Before' and 'beside.'

28. E-30 B

Were the defendant, accordingly, to abandon thro' fear of death the station divinely assigned to him, the station of a philosophic life, THEN would he indeed render himself liable to the charge of impiety and unbelief. Then would he be guilty of the folly of pretending to know what one knows not — in fearing that thing which may perchance be not one of man's ills, but his greatest blessing. Be death what it may; disobedience to authority, human or divine, he knows to be a bad thing, and a wrong. The known evil he will fear and flee; the unknown, never. Even tho' his judges would release him, on his promise to obey them and abstain from philosophy and search, such an offer on the part of his fellow-citizens he assures them he would

 ναῖοι, εἰ, ὅτε μὲν με οἱ ἄρχοντες ἔταττον, οὓς ὑμεῖς decline — promising rather to obey GOD, and never to cease philo-sophizing and laboring with his fellows, to make them wiser and better men, to the end that above all possessions they should prize the welfare of their souls. So then, let them acquit or condemn, his own course is clear, tho' the penalty were many deaths.

1. Ἐγὼ . . . εἰργασμένος: 'accordingly, I should myself be guilty, etc.' The emphatic ἐγὼ introduces a specific illustration of the general truth stated above, οὐ ἂν τις ἐαυτὸν τάξῃ κτλ.

2. εἰ . . . τότε μὲν . . . ἔμενον
 . . . ἐνταῦθα δὲ . . . λίποιμι τὴν τάξιν: 'if, after remaining at my post on those occasions there, I were to desert it here.' The 'shocking thing' (δεινόν) would consist in the discrepancy — aban* doning his divinely appointed mission, when in affairs human he had evinced a clear sense of duty and the courage that supports it,
 — as if the command of God were less strenuous than the command of man! Periods of this form usually, as here, involve an argument from the less to the greater, the μὲν member presenting a supposition of conceded fact, to which the hypothesis of the δέ member must a fortiori adapt itself.

2. ὑμεῖς εἴλεσθε: it was not unusual in Athenian trials to address the δικασταί as representatives of the political community.
 Cp. 30 A, τοῖς ἀποταῖς . . . ἐστὶ;
 32 B, ὑμεῖς, ὑμῶν κελευόντων; 21
 A, ὑμῶν τῷ πλήθει, μεθ' ὑμῶν.

3. ἐν Ποτειδαίᾳ κτλ.: there is pathos in this indirect mention of the sturdy military services of Socrates in behalf of his country.
 See the names in the Index.

5. τοῦ δὲ θεοῦ τάττοντος . . .
 ἐνταῦθα δέ: the second δέ is merely a repetition (reminder) of the former one. Note that μὲν is likewise repeated above, in the first member of the compound period: ὅτε μὲν . . . τότε μὲν. In general, either μὲν or δέ, or, as here, both particles, may be repeated to secure distinctness in the line of thought, especially in passages of considerable length or complexity. Cp. the frequent repetition of ἂν, as below 31 A.

τάττοντος, ὡς ἐγὼ φήθην τε καὶ ὑπέλαβον, φιλοσοφοῦντά με δεῖν ζῆν καὶ ἐξετάζοντα ἑμαυτὸν καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους, 29 Α ἐνταῦθα δὲ φοβηθεῖς ἢ θάνατον ἢ ἄλλο ὅτιοῦν πρᾶγμα λίποιμι τὴν τάξιν. δεινὸν τᾶν εἶη, καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς τότε 5 ἂν, με δικαίως εἰσάγοι τις εἰς δικαστήριον, ὅτι οὐ νομίζω θεοὺς εἶναι ἀπειθῶν τῇ μαντείᾳ καὶ δεδιώς θάνατον καὶ οἰόμενος σοφὸς εἶναι οὐκ ὢν. τὸ γάρ τοι θάνατον δεδιέναι, ὦ ἄνδρες, οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἐστὶν ἢ δοκεῖν σοφὸν εἶναι μὴ ὄντα· δοκεῖν γὰρ εἰδέναι ἐστὶν ἃ οὐκ οἶδεν. οἶδε 10 μὲν γὰρ οὐδεὶς τὸν θάνατον οὐδ' εἰ τυγχάνει τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ πάντων μέγιστον ὄν τῶν ἀγαθῶν, δεδίασιν δ' ὡς εὖ εἰδότες Β ὅτι μέγιστον τῶν κακῶν ἐστίν. καὶ τοῦτο πῶς οὐκ ἀμαθία ἐστὶν αὕτη ἢ ἐπονείδιστος, ἢ τοῦ οἶεσθαι εἰδέναι ἃ οὐκ οἶδεν; ἐγὼ δ', ὦ ἄνδρες, καὶ ἐνταῦθα ἴσως διαφέρω 15 τῶν πολλῶν ἀνθρώπων, καὶ εἰ δὴ τῷ σοφώτερός του φαίην εἶναι, τούτῳ ἂν, ὅτι οὐκ εἰδὼς ἱκανῶς περὶ τῶν ἐν Ἄιδου, οὕτω καὶ οἶομαι οὐκ εἰδέναι· τὸ δὲ ἀδικεῖν καὶ ἀπειθεῖν τῷ βελτίονι, καὶ θεῷ καὶ ἀνθρώπῳ, ὅτι κακὸν

4. δεινὸν τοι κτλ.: it is here seen that δεινά, δεινόν is said mildly instead of the more specific ἀσεβῆ, ἀσεβές, or even (as the passage forcibly suggests) ἄθεον.

4. ὡς ἀληθῶς: 'in very truth,' Crit. 46 D, 48 C. ὡς, as in ὡς τάχιστα, ὡς βέλτιστος, etc.

6. ἀπειθῶν... καὶ δεδιώς θάνατον κτλ.: God commands me through his oracle (the speaker has just said) ἐξετάζειν ἑμαυτόν. I might well be charged with impiety, or even atheism, were I to disobey such a command and act as if I knew death to be a bad thing for me, before examining myself to make sure whether it is not a good thing.

12. ἀμαθία... ἢ ἐπονείδιστος: 'unwisdom of the reprehensible sort that has been noted (αὕτη).'

14. καὶ ἐνταῦθα: 'right here,' even herein.

16. τούτῳ ἂν: sc. φαίην εἶναι.

18. ἀπειθεῖν τῷ βελτίονι: this is the species of ἀδικεῖν now under consideration.

1. πρὸ . . . τῶν κακῶν: cp. πρὸ τοῦ αἰσχροῦ 28 D.

3. οὐδ' εἰ με νῦν . . . ἀφίετε: 'not even if you are ready to release me now.' Cp. below, ἀφίεμέν σε, 'we release you,' i.e. we are ready to do so. The conclusion to be expected here, οὐδ' οὕτως ὑμῖν πείσομαι, ἀλλὰ τῷ θεῷ, is displaced and modified by the meanderings of the sentence. In its altered form it occurs below D, εἵποιμ' ἂν.

5. εἰσελθεῖν: equivalent in sense to the passive of εἰσαγαγεῖν. Anytus had said: Either Socrates ought not to have been prosecuted to begin with, or, once prosecuted, he must not be suffered to escape the death penalty. To acquit him, Anytus urged, would be to set the stamp of approval upon his doings, and so make a bad matter worse.

7. εἰ διαφευξοίμην: the words of Anytus were, εἰ διαφεύξεται, admonitory. Cp. εἰ τιμωρήσεται κτλ. above 28 C, and the note.

10. οὐ πειθόμεθα: 'we are not disposed to comply.'

13. εἰ . . . με . . . ἀφίετε: 'supposing you, then, as I say, to be ready to release me on this condition.' Supposition of the Ideal, adapted in form to εἰ . . . εἴποιτε above, instead of repeating the original εἰ . . . ἀφίετε.

15. ἀσπάζομαι μὲν: Index, μὲν.

1. οὐ μὴ παύσωμαι: for the double negative, see Index, οὐ.

2. παρακελευόμενος: this first mention of exhortation may be said to mark the point in the Apology where (without the least abruptness of transition) the intellectual comes to be merged in the moral view — identity of knowledge and virtue. A preparatory note was sounded 25 C–26 A.

7. φρονήσεως: the words that occur here, in passing from φρόνησις to ἀρετή, are instructive — ἀλήθεια, ἡ ψυχὴ, βελτίστη, ἐπιμελεῖσθαι, φροντίζειν, ἐρωτᾶν, ἐξετάζειν, ἐλέγχειν.

19. τὴν . . . ὑπηρεσίαν: cp. τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ λατρείαν 23 C.

20. πειθῶν: 'trying to prevail upon'; variation of παρακελευόμενος.

 C τεθνάναι.

2. πρότερον: cp. πρό 28 D,
 29 B.

2. μηδέ: connects οὕτω σφόδρα to (μή) πρότερον. Index, οὐδέ.

3. οὐκ ἐκ χρημάτων ἀρετὴ . . .
 ἀλλ' ἐξ ἀρετῆς χρήματα: χρήματα,
 to point the contrast rhetorically.
 The spirit of the remark is made clear by what follows, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ἀγαθὰ . . . ἅπαντα κτλ. Note, too, that ἀρετή is of intellectual as well as of moral excellence.

6. ταῦτα λέγων . . . ταῦτ' ἂν:
 ταῦτα, twice strongly emphasized.
 In the third instance, ἄλλα . . .
 ἢ ταῦτα, the word has receded to an unemphatic position.

6. ταῦτ' ἂν εἷη βλαβερά: 'that can pass for harmful.'

8. οὐδὲν λέγει: Index, λέγειν.

8. πρὸς ταῦτα . . . ἢ πείθεσθε
 Ἀνύτῳ ἢ μή, κτλ.: the words φαίην ἂν ὧ ἄ. A. are parenthetical. πρὸς ταῦτα ('so then') with the sentence. For the tone conveyed by this phrase see the following note, and cp. the words of Prometheus, πρὸς ταῦτα ῥιπτέσθω μὲν αἰθαλούσσω φλόξ, . . . γνάμψει γὰρ οὐδὲν τῶνδ' ἐμε, Aesch. Prom. 992.

9. ὡς . . . οὐκ ἂν ποιήσαντος ἄλλα: 'resting assured that I am one incapable of doing differently.'
 The participial and the potential form (also φαίην ἂν, at the beginning) lend urbanity to a determined and, indeed, defiant utterance. The sentence loses not a whit of its solemnity and power by being gently put.

10. πολλάκις τεθνάναι: cp. 41 A,
 and see Index, θνήσκειν.

Μὴ θορυβεῖτε, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, ἀλλὰ ἐμμείνατέ μοι οἷς ἐδεήθην ὑμῶν, μὴ θορυβεῖν ἐφ' οἷς ἂν λέγω, ἀλλ' ἀκούειν· καὶ γάρ, ὡς ἐγὼ οἶμαι, ὀνήσεσθε ἀκούοντες. μέλλω γὰρ οὖν ἅττα ὑμῖν ἐρεῖν καὶ ἄλλα, ἐφ' οἷς ἴσως speak such words as might provoke an outcry, for their own sake to refrain. Knowing, as now they do, what sort of a man the defendant is, let them be sure that in putting him to death they will chiefly harm themselves. It is not possible for the worse man to harm the better, as these poor prosecutors vainly strive. To bear their threatened penalty of death, or exile, or disfranchisement, were no great evil; the evil thing is the MIND to give over a righteous man to death. Therefore, in truth, not for himself does the defendant plead, but for his judges, to save them from a grievous error. Heaven has granted them one monitor, he declares, to rouse and spur them on to a higher life; another they will hardly find. How truly this one is divinely, not humanly, impelled, his strange devotion proves. Poverty has been his portion. For, thro' a long life, no self-interest, but the spiritual welfare of others, has claimed all his care.

1. Μὴ θορυβεῖτε κτλ.: the profound silence immediately following such an utterance as the last would speedily be broken by lively manifestations of displeasure.

2. ἐδεήθην: above 17 D, 20 E.

4. ἅττα . . . καὶ ἄλλα: 'one or two things more.' For ἅττα, see Index, τίς.

5. βοήσεσθε: βοᾶν, more than merely θορυβεῖν. The specific word is stronger than the generic.

5. μηδαμῶς κτλ.: the request is made here for the last time. The fiction of a judicial plea of defense, so framed as to involve a counter-accusation of those who sit in judgment, couched in terms of paradox and satire, could go no farther than it is carried in what here follows. After the verdict, 35 E, on the other hand, when their revenge is certain, the court can easily be imagined as tolerant of further caustic utterances on the part of the condemned man.

7. ἐμὲ . . . Ἄνυτος: 'no Meletus or Anytus can do me any harm.'

7. οὐδέ . . . ἂν δύναίτο: 'his ability to do so were inconceivable.'

2. οὐ... θεμιτὸν κτλ.: for Socrates, a man does not experience κακά, so long as he is not himself κακός. According to the doctrine here briefly enunciated, but consistently supported in word and act by Socrates thro' the Apology and elsewhere, the χείρων ἀνὴρ cannot harm τὸν ἀμείμονα, because he cannot make him bad.

3. ἀποκτείνειε μέντοι ἂν κτλ.: 'he might, to be sure, very likely cause him (me) to be put to death, or banished, or deprived of civic privileges.'

4. οὗτος μὲν ἴσως: 'tho' he (Meletus) probably.'

5. καὶ ἄλλος τίς που: 'and many another, doubtless.'

6. ποιεῖν ἢ... ποιεῖ, κτλ.: what Meletus does is κακόν for him, because he is himself κακός in doing it.

7. νῦν οὖν, κτλ.: it is readily seen what the defendant means when he warns his judges that he is pleading their cause. As we look back upon the martyrdom of Socrates and the ignominy of Athens, we require no arguments to convince us of the truth of Plato's contention.

8. ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν: cp. εἴ τι ἄμεινον καὶ ὑμῖν καὶ ἐμοί 19 A.

12. εἰ καὶ... εἰπεῖν: 'tho' it be a somewhat ludicrous comparison.'

13. μὲν: see the Index.

2. ὑπὸ μύωπός τινος: 'by some sort of spur.' But the rider is mainly thought of. It is to the rider, who applies the stimulus, that Socrates is made to compare himself.

2. οἷον δὴ: 'even as'; conjunctive phrase. Even so, we should say.

3. προσθεικέναι: adapted to προσκείμενον above, προσκείσθαι being precisely the passive of προσθεικέναι.

3. ἐγείρων: adapted to ἐγείρεσθαι above. With the principles that follow, the figurative language gives way to the proper usage.

4. ἕνα ἕκαστον: not under the influence of ὀνειδίζων, which requires the dative case, but in distributive apposition to ὑμᾶς.

7. τάχ' ἂν . . . ἀποκτείναιτε: the repeated ἂν serves to mark off with distinctness the several preliminary stages of the event (τὸ ἀποκτείναι); indicated here, as so often, in participial form.

9. πειθόμενοι Ἀντύῳ: reminiscence of 29 c.

13. οὐ γὰρ ἀνθρωπίνῳ ἔοικε: cp. ἔοικεν . . . αἰνιγμα ξυγτιθέντι 27 A.

14. τὸ ἐμὲ . . . ἀρετῆς: the article comprehends all that follows it as subject of the sentence.

15. τῶν . . . ἐμαυτοῦ . . . ἡμε-

 10 τυρα, ὥς ἀληθῆ λέγω, τὴν πενίαν.

ληκῆναι καὶ ἀνέχεσθαι . . . ἀμελουμένων: one and the same idea is here presented from different points of view. Not only the active and the passive side of the matter, but also the final fact as such (perfect, ἡμέληκα) and the prolonged strain (imperfect, ἀνέχομαι) are contrasted. τὰ ἐμαντοῦ and τὰ οἰκεία are not, in meaning, contrasted expressions.

4. εἶχον ἄν τινα λόγον: sc. παρεκελευόμενος. Index, λόγος. He virtually says here, That would seem human-like, not τοιοῦτον οἶον ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ δεδούσθαι.

7. παρασχόμενοι μάρτυρα: explanatory of τοῦτο . . . ἀπαναισχυντῆσαι. Cp. ἀναισχυντήσεις διαλεγόμενος, Crit. 53 c. Note that here both infinitive and participle are aorists. 'They could not compass that shamelessness — of furnishing a witness, etc.' Such a witness would necessarily have been suborned, and would have been confronted with the very substantial voucher produced by the defendant in his own person.

9. ἱκανὸν . . . λέγω: 'sufficient, I fancy, is the witness that I furnish of the truth of my words.' See the note on ποίαν δὴ σοφίαν ταύτην 20 D.

31 C-E

Tho' to his hearers it may sound strange, his mission, he affirms, was bound to be fulfilled in private life. His divine monitor (that mystic warning voice whereof he has often made mention) forbade him to choose the public way. Intuition is confirmed by reflection. Had he tried to work thro' politics, his beneficent labors had long since been closed. No righteous man,

Ἴσως ἂν οὖν δόξειεν ἄτοπον εἶναι, ὅτι δὴ ἐγὼ ἰδία μὲν ταῦτα συμβουλεύω περιῶν καὶ πολυπραγμονῶν, δημοσίᾳ δὲ οὐ τολμῶ ἀναβαίνων εἰς τὸ πλῆθος τὸ ὑμέτερον συμβουλεύειν τῇ πόλει. τούτου δὲ αἰτιὸν ἔστιν ὅς ὑμεῖς ἐμοῦ πολλάκις ἀκηκόατε πολλαχοῦ λέγοντος, ὅτι Δμοι θεῖόν τι καὶ δαιμόνιον γίγνεται, ὃ δὴ καὶ ἐν τῇ γραφῇ ἐπικωμῶδῶν Μέλητος ἐγράψατο· ἐμοὶ δὲ τοῦτ'

he tells them plainly, can stand up firm and consistent against the Athenian or any other throng, and LIVE.

2. Συμβουλεύω: the word is adapted to συμβουλεύειν (τῇ πόλει) below. Except for this point, παρακελεύομαι would have been said with ἰδία.

2. πολυπραγμονῶν: cp. above B, τῶν μὲν ἐμαυτοῦ . . . ἡμεληκέναι . . . τὸ δὲ ὑμέτερον πράττειν αἰεί. That was πολυπραγμοσύνη, as ordinarily understood, the meddling with other people's affairs, instead of minding one's own (ἡσυχίαν ἄγειν). Here, πολυπραγμονῶν is said from the point of view of some supposed objector (ὅτι δὴ). Below 33 A we find the defendant from his own point of view using the words λέγοντος καὶ τὰ ἐμαυτοῦ πράττοντος ('attending to my business'—of looking after that of other people). Index, πολυπραγμονεῖν.

3. ἀναβαίνων: see Index, ἐκκλησία.

7. ἐπικωμῶδῶν: a most instructive word. When in his play of the Clouds Aristophanes caricatured Socrates (e.g. making him deny the gods, 365 ff., cp. Δῖνος βασιλεύει, τὸν Δί' ἐξεληλακώς, 828) the poet was animated by no ill will toward the philosopher in person, treating him no more hardly than he felt at liberty to deal with the god Dionysus himself (Frogs, passim). That was ἐπικωμῶδειν in the proper sense of the word. But when the prosecutors of Socrates had framed an indictment demanding for him the penalty of death, on the ground that his familiar, warning spirit was a new deity imported into the state (and a majority of the unhappy judges at the trial had allowed themselves to sanction this writing), the blundering malice of it all was too crude and contemptible to be honored with serious consideration on the part of Plato, as has been already seen, 27 A-E. Accordingly, with the

8. μὴ ἄχθεσθε: the very plain words that follow are of the sort ἐφ' οἷς ἴσως βοήσεσθε 30 C.

Yet such a man is the defendant — one whom no fear of bonds or death can deter from standing steadfast on the side of right. The proof thereof may be found in that which speaks louder than words — in his actions: once, when, as presiding officer of the popular Assembly, he braved the stormy threats and denunciation of the multitude, and refused to put an illegal motion to the vote; and, again, when the Thirty Tyrants commanded him in vain to help in arresting one of their guiltless victims.

οὐ λόγους, ἀλλ' ὃ ὑμεῖς τιμᾶτε, ἔργα. ἀκούσατε δὴ μου τὰ ἐμοὶ συμβεβηκότα, ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι οὐδ' ἂν ἐνὶ ὑπεικάθοιμι παρὰ τὸ δίκαιον δείσας θάνατον, μὴ ὑπείκων δὲ ἅμα καὶ ἀπολοίμην. ἐρῶ δὲ ὑμῶν φορτικά μὲν

2. Οὐδ' . . . ἐνὶ: 'to no man living.'

3. μὴ ὑπείκων δέ: 'but yielding not.' Index, μῆ.

4. φορτικά μὲν καὶ δικανικά: 'what is wearisome enough, to be sure, and savors of the law-courts'; viz. a recital of one's own exploits and merits. The recital is Plato's; but the self-laudation is put into the mouth of Socrates, here, as elsewhere, with consummate tact and dramatic skill. Index, βουλεύειν, βουλή.

9. ἀθρόους: i.e. by a single vote (μᾶ ψήφῳ), instead of allowing each man a separate trial, as the law provided. Index, ναυμαχία.

12. ἐνδεικνύναι . . . καὶ ἀπάγειν: see these verbs in the Index.

13. τῶν ῥητόρων: i.e. τῶν πολιτικῶν, cp. 23 E.

15. μεθ' ὑμῶν γενέσθαι: 'To side with you.' For ὑμῶν, here and above B, see the note on ὑμεῖς εἰσεσθε 28 E.

15. μὴ κτλ.: this form of the negative, under the influence of the infinitive construction.

νετο, οἱ τριάκοντα αὐτὴ μεταπεμφάμενοί με πέμπτον αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν θόλον προσέταξαν ἀγαγεῖν ἐκ Σαλαμῖνος Λέοντα τὸν Σαλαμῖνιον, ὥα ἀποθάνει· οἱα δὴ καὶ ἄλλοις ἐκείνοι 4 πολλοῖς πολλὰ προσέταττον, βουλόμενοι ὥς πλείστους ἀναπλῆσαι αἰτιῶν· τότε μέντοι ἐγὼ οὐ λόγῳ ἀλλ' ἔργῳ αὐτὸ ἐνεδειξάμην, ὅτι ἐμοὶ θανάτου μὲν μέλει, εἰ μὴ ἀγροικότερον ἦν εἰπεῖν, οὐδ' ὅτιοῦν, τοῦ δὲ μηδὲν ἄδικον μηδ' ἀνόσιον ἐργάζεσθαι, τούτου δὲ τὸ πᾶν μέλει. ἐμὲ γὰρ ἐκείνη ἡ ἀρχὴ οὐκ ἐξέπληξεν οὕτως ἰσχυρὰ οὔσα, ὥστε 10 ἄδικόν τι ἐργάσασθαι, ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ ἐκ τῆς θόλου ἐξήλθομεν, οἱ μὲν τέτταρες ὄχοντο εἰς Σαλαμῖνα καὶ ἤγαγον Λέοντα, ἐγὼ δὲ ὀχόμεν ἀπὼν οἴκαδε. καὶ ἴσως ἂν διὰ ταῦτα ἀπέθανον, εἰ μὴ ἡ ἀρχὴ διὰ ταχέων κατελύθη· Ἐκαὶ τούτων ὑμῖν ἔσονται πολλοὶ μάρτυρες.

1. πέμπτον αὐτόν: i.e. with four others.

5. ἀναπλῆσαι: 'to implicate.' But in Greek the figure is of smirching.

6. ὅτι . . . οὐδ' ὅτιοῦν: 'that, for death, I care (were it not too rude a thing to say) not a whit.' Such a remark, if the speaker did not strictly mean all that he said, would be a mere piece of vulgar levity. Uncultivated persons habitually use such expressions (οὐ μέλει μοι οὐδ' ὅτιοῦν), even regarding solemn matters, with thoughtless irreverence.

7. τοῦ δὲ . . . τούτου δέ: see the note on ἐνταῦθα δέ 28 E.

11. οἱ μὲν . . . ὄχοντο . . .

ἐγὼ δὲ ὀχόμεν κτλ.: note the antithetic arrangement, including the pointed repetition of the verb.

13. διὰ ταχέων: 'speedily.' Index, τριάκοντα.

32 E-33 B

Nay, in public life, there is truly no man who could have stood forth an uncompromising champion of pure and simple justice, and have attained to the defendant's age. But such has been HIS course, even in affairs of state, when by chance in contact therewith; and ever in private relations, from first to last — no concession to any man's wrongdoing, while yet every man has been free to hear and to follow. If of his hearers or followers any has proved bad, that is not the defendant's fault. Disciples they are falsely termed. He has had no doctrines to impart, no tuition fees to gather. And no one can claim to have derived aught from him wherein all others might not share.

Ἄρ' οὖν ἂν με οἴεσθε τοσάδε ἔτη διαγενέσθαι, εἰ ἔπραττον τὰ δημόσια, καὶ πράττων ἀξίως ἀνδρὸς ἀγαθοῦ ἐβοήθουν τοῖς δικαίοις καί, ὥσπερ χρή, τοῦτο περὶ πλεί-

1. Ἄρ' οὖν ἂν . . . διαγενέσθαι: 'would I, then, think you, have lived on, etc.?'

7. οὐδενὶ . . . ξυγχωρήσας . . . παρὰ τὸ δίκαιον: explanatory of τοιοῦτος and ὁ αὐτὸς οὗτος. The participle is at the same time supplementary to φανοῦμαι.

8. τούτων οὐδενὶ κτλ.: here the discourse reverts to the negative or defensive form—to the charge of corrupting the youth, touched upon, but not finally disposed of, in the examination of Meletus, above 25 C–26 A.

9. οἱ διαβάλλοντες . . . φασίν: the popular designation of his companions and followers as μαθηταί, and of himself as their διδάσκαλος, was repudiated by Socrates, because it implied, first, that he talked for pay, as the professional sophists did; and, again, that he had positive doctrines to impart, when in fact he was establishing truth in a negative way.

13. οὐδέ . . . οὐ: 'nor is it true, that I converse if I receive pay, but otherwise do not converse.'

γομαι, μὴ λαμβάνων δὲ οὐ, ἀλλ' ὁμοίως καὶ πλουσίῳ καὶ πέννι παρέχω ἑμαυτὸν ἐρωτᾶν, καὶ εἴαν τις βούληται ἀποκρινόμενος ἀκούειν ὧν ἂν λέγω. καὶ τούτων ἐγὼ εἴτε τις χρηστὸς γίγνεται εἴτε μή, οὐκ ἂν δικαίως τὴν 5 αἰτίαν ὑπέχοιμι, ὧν μήτε ὑπεσχόμην μηδενὶ μηδὲν πώποτε μάθημα μήτε ἐδίδαξα· εἰ δέ τις φησι παρ' ἐμοῦ πώποτέ τι μαθεῖν ἢ ἀκοῦσαι ἰδίᾳ ὃ τι μὴ καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι πάντες, εὖ ἴστε ὅτι οὐκ ἀληθῆ λέγει.

2. ἐρωτᾶν: 'to be questioned,' we should say. The English idiom requires the passive voice.

2. καὶ εἴαν τις . . . ἀκούειν κτλ.: instead of bluntly saying, "or to be the questioner," he puts it gently: 'or if any hearer prefers to do the answering (I put the questions myself).' Thus the final discomfiture of the respondent would not be due to any aggressive movement on the part of Socrates at the outset.

3. τούτων: 'as for these persons.' The genitive, with τὶς.

3. ἐγὼ: placed in juxtaposition with τούτων to emphasize the contrast.

4. εἴτε τις . . . εἴτε μή: whether one or another of them turns out well or ill. γίγνεται, Historical Present. See the Introduction, p. 38.

5. ὧν . . . μηδενὶ μηδὲν . . . ἐδίδαξα: 'when to no man of them all have I at any time either promised or given instruction of any sort whatever.' τούτων, the antecedent of ὧν, is wholly indefinite in its reference; the relative clause itself, a conditional one. Observe the accumulation of negative words.

What attracts these followers he has explained before—it is indeed attractive to hear the conversations, to witness the humbling of vain pretenders to knowledge. For the defendant himself, however, the motive is no merely human strain, but the impulsion of a mighty divine command. If the influence exerted upon the youth who follow him be a harmful one, there is abundant opportunity to test the matter. Here at the trial now are many of them present, and with them their fathers or their older brothers. How comes it, that not only the youths who have been corrupted, but likewise the uncorrupted elderly men, their relatives, are present not to denounce, but to support him who is charged with being the doer of this harm?

Ἄλλὰ διὰ τί δὴ ποτε μετ' ἐμοῦ χαίρουσιν τινες πολὺν χρόνον διατρίβοντες; ἀκηκόατε, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι· πᾶσαν ὑμῖν τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐγὼ εἶπον, ὅτι ἀκούοντες χαίρουσιν ἐξεταζομένοις τοῖς οἰομένοις μὲν εἶναι σοφοῖς, οὗσι δ' οὐ· ἔστι γὰρ οὐκ ἀηδές. ἐμοὶ δὲ τοῦτο, ὡς ἐγὼ φημι, προστέτακται ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ πράττειν καὶ ἐκ μαντείων καὶ ἐξ ἐνυπνίων καὶ παντὶ τρόπῳ, ὥπερ τίς ποτε καὶ ἄλλη θεία μοῖρα ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ ὅτι οὖν προσέταξε πράττειν. ταῦτα, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, καὶ ἀληθὴ ἔστιν καὶ εὐδλεγκτα. εἰ γὰρ δὴ ἔγωγε τῶν νέων τοὺς μὲν διαφθείρω, τοὺς δὲ διέφθαρκα, χρῆν δῆπου, εἴτε τινὲς αὐτῶν προ-

2. Ἀκηκόατε: above 23 C, χαίρουσιν ἀκούοντες ἐξεταζομένων τῶν ἀνθρώπων.

3. ἀκούοντες χαίρουσιν: the participle is emphasized, because it contains the answer to διὰ τί in the question asked above.

4. ἐξεταζομένοις τοῖς οἰομένοις κτλ.: the dative, with χαίρουσιν. The genitive which appears in the passage above quoted from 23 C is under the influence of ἀκούοντες.

6. καὶ ἐκ μαντείων . . . καὶ παντὶ τρόπῳ, ὥπερ κτλ.: thus we see that the story of the oracular response granted to Chaerephon (20 E) was merely illustrative of the inner conviction and irresistible impulse that held Socrates, as one inspired, to his memorable life work.

8. μοῖρα: 'dispensation.'

9. ταῦτα . . . εὐδλεγκτα: Socrates' own course he must pursue; on the other hand, it was inevitable that this philosophizing would attract numerous followers and win the devotion of some of them. Since, however, it was carried on in public places, while its adherents were well known and many of them easily accessible, the means of testing its moral soundness would not be far to seek.

11. χρῆν δῆπου: 'then, of course.' In translating, χρῆν may well be deferred till νυνὶ κτλ. is reached: 'they ought to be coming up here now themselves, etc.'

11. εἴτε: the speaker begins as σβύτεροι γενόμενοι ἔγνωσαν ὅτι νέοις οὖσιν αὐτοῖς ἐγὼ κακὸν πῶποτε τι ξυνεβούλευσα, νυνὶ αὐτοὺς ἀναβαίνον-τας ἐμοῦ κατηγορεῖν καὶ τιμωρεῖσθαι· εἰ δὲ μὴ αὐτοὶ

if he were going to say something like εἴτε αὐτῶν τινες . . . εἴτε τῶν οἰκείων ἔγνωσαν κτλ. But εἴτε is forgotten, and εἰ δὲ enters below, as if εἰ μὲν had preceded.

6. νῦν μεμνήσθαι: the infinitive depends on χρῆν.

7. πάντως: 'in fact.'

11. τοίνυν: 'again'; passing from the mention of fathers to that of brothers of young men who have been his followers.

14. ἐκείνός γε: whatever might be surmised as to the influence exerted by the living youths upon their respective fathers or brothers, to prevail upon them to refrain from bearing witness against the deluder of their souls, here is a case at any rate where τὸ καταδεηθῆναι is impossible.

17. οὔτοσι Πλάτων: evidence that the writer of the Apology was present at the trial of Socrates. Similarly from the Phaedo (59 B) we learn that Plato was unable to be with the master on the occasion of his death.

1. μάλιστα μὲν: see the Index.
3. παραχωρῶ: 'I yield the floor,' as we say.

7. τάχ' ἂν λόγον ἔχοιεν: because they might be as it were bewitched by the defendant. For λόγον ἔχειν, see Index, λόγος.

10. ἀλλ' ἢ: Index, ἀλλά.

will do nothing of the kind reason that was made clear when he spoke of death.—And what will the world think of Athens, he

ing the end of the introductory remarks, and the beginning of the defense proper.

2. ἀναμνησθεὶς ἑαυτοῦ: i.e. calling to mind some trial in which he had himself been defendant. The Athenian δικαστής, like the modern jurymen, was but an ordinary citizen; on one day it was his lot to try his neighbor, on another to be tried himself.

2. εἰ δ' μὲν . . . ἐδεήθη τε καὶ ἰκέτευσε . . . ἐγὼ δὲ οὐδὲν . . . τούτων ποιήσω: one or another of the judges, noting that Socrates is apparently not about to make the piteous scene that he can remember to have himself made on some similar occasion, might be piqued at the contrast — feeling his own inferiority thus brought home to him. — For the form of the period, see 28 E.

2. καὶ ἐλάττω . . . ἀγωνιζόμενος: i.e. even when not on trial for his life as Socrates is now.

7. ἔρα: it can be inferred with tolerable certainty, from what the defendant has already said, that he will not beg for mercy.

8. ταῦτα ἐννοήσας κτλ.: the consequence of such a reflection might be a fit of stubborn pride on the part of the juror, strong enough to overcome his native sense of justice. Note the comparative αὐθαδέστερον, and the aorist σχοίη.

9. αὐτοῖς τούτοις: 'at just that'; when, but for that, he would perhaps vote the other way.

11. οὐκ ἀξιῶ μὲν . . . εἰ δ' οὖν: 'I do not expect it of you, to be sure; if, however,' — as I say — (this be true of any of you).

εικὴ ἂν μοι δοκῶ πρὸς τοῦτον λέγειν, λέγων ὅτι Ἐμοί, ὦ ἄριστε, εἰσὶν μὲν πού τινες καὶ οἰκεῖοι· καὶ γὰρ τοῦτο αὐτὸ τὸ τοῦ Ὀμήρου, οὐδ' ἐγὼ ἀπὸ δρυὸς οὐδ' ἀπὸ πέτρης πέφυκα, ἀλλ' ἐξ ἀνθρώπων, ὥστε καὶ οἰκεῖοί μοι εἰσι καὶ υἱεῖς, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, τρεῖς, εἰς μὲν μαιράκιον ἤδη, δύο δὲ παιδία· ἀλλ' ὅμως οὐδένα αὐτῶν δεῦρο ἀναβιβασάμενος δεήσομαι ὑμῶν ἀποψηφίσασθαι. τί δὴ οὖν οὐδὲν τούτων ποιήσω; οὐκ ἀνθαδι-

The case imagined above c is assumed as real (εἰ . . . οὕτως ἔχει) merely for the sake of the argument, while the broken form of the sentence mitigates the harshness of the whole suggestion.— It is noticeable that Plato's criticism of the judicial abuse here considered is milder and more conciliatory in tone than most of the other strictures upon the Athenian courts attributed to the defense of Socrates. At his trial there could have been no opportunity for this familiar evil to manifest itself; and it is only by means of an ingenious fiction that any consideration of it could be introduced into the Apology. The consistent attitude of the sage, however,— never so great in what he did as in what he would not do, —is pictured here with powerful effect. And unquestionably, at the real trial, his unshrinking, independent demeanor, as well as his freedom of utterance, must have prompted many a wavering juror to unfavorable decision.

2. ἐστὶν μὲν: the correlative to μὲν appears in ἀλλ' ὅμως, below.

2. καὶ οἰκεῖοι: i.e. he does not stand alone by himself; there are also (καί) kindred souls at home. So καί again below, after ὥστε.

3. τοῦτο . . . Ὀμήρου: 'even as Homer hath it.' See the note on τὸ δέ 23 A. The quotation is from the Odyssey, where Penelope requests the disguised Odysseus to reveal his origin, adding: οὐ γὰρ ἀπὸ δρυὸς ἔσσι παλαιφάτου, οὐδ' ἀπὸ πέτρης, τ 163.

5. καὶ υἱεῖς: 'even sons.' Index, Σωκράτης.

8. οὐκ ἀνθαδιζόμενος . . . οὐδ' ἀτιμάζων: the defendant must make clear to his judges, what men in general are slow enough to comprehend or believe of anybody, that the motives which animate him are not personal, but rational (moral). It is no spirit of self-will or offishness, he says, nor

Εζόμενος, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, οὐδ' ὑμεῖς ἀτρεμάζων· ἀλλ' — εἰ μὲν θαρραλέως ἐγὼ ἔχω πρὸς θάνατον ἢ γῆ· ἄλλως λόγος, πρὸς δ' οὖν δόξαν καὶ ἐμοὶ καὶ ὑμῖν καὶ ὅλη τῇ πόλει οὐ μοι δοκεῖ καλὸν εἶναι ἐμὲ τούτων οὐδὲν ποιεῖν any disposition to slight his hearers (if the court would really feel flattered by being appealed to with prayers and tears) that leads him to refrain from supplicating them, but considerations of a higher nature.

1. ἀλλά κτλ.: the discourse would regularly have been continued in participial form. Since, however, the prime motive (τὸ θαρραλέως ἔχειν πρὸς θάνατον) has been discussed elsewhere (ἄλλος λόγος), the waiving of this gives a new turn to the structure of the sentence.

3. δόξαν: cp. καλόν and αἰσχρόν, below. Here is a matter, he says, which concerns, to begin with, the good name of Athens, and of every citizen of Athens.

5. τοῦτο τὸ ὄνομα: σοφὸν εἶναι.

7. εἰ . . . τοιοῦτοι ἔσονται: the Real Condition of the Future has an admonitory effect here, cp. 28 c. Below, in εἰ ἀποθανοῦνται, its effect is of apprehension, dread.

8. οἱ δοκοῦντες: adapted to δεδογμένον, above. If things are to go on in this way, urges Plato, —if men who are believed to be superior to their fellows cannot live up to the reputation (δόξα) which they enjoy, it looks very badly indeed.

11. ὡς . . . οἰομένους: 'apparently imagining, etc.'

12. ὥσπερ κτλ.: 'just as if they would be exempt from death, provided you do not inflict it.'

13. ἀθανάτων ἐσομένων: not

 C εἶναι δεῖσθαι τοῦ δικαστοῦ οὐδὲ δεόμενον ἀποφεύγειν, ἐσομένους. With the new view introduced by ὥσπερ the grammatical connection becomes loosened ("absolute").

1. οἱ: an initial relative pronoun lends gravity and force to the sentence. It is usually to be translated by an emphasized personal pronoun ('they').

1. αἰσχύνῃν: adapted to αἰσχρόν, above.

4. γυναικῶν: cp. γυναικομίμοις ὑπτιάσασιν χερῶν Aesch. Prom. 1005.

8. μᾶλλον: i.e. will condemn rather than acquit.

35 C, D

Furthermore, 't is WRONG to appeal to the feelings of the court rather than to their reason and the sense of justice. The juror is sworn to cast his ballot, not by favor, but according to the law. To beg for his favor is to prompt him to perjury and impiety. The defendant is charged with impiety — shall he, then, while on his defense, do that which would substantiate the accusation? Shall he put himself on a level with his accusers, and seem to cherish no worthier a belief in God than theirs?

11. Οὐδὲ δίκαιον: 'not right either,' as we colloquially say. Index, οὐδέ. The speaker might have said here, ὥσπερ δ' ἐστὶν αἰσχρόν, οὕτω καὶ ἄδικον κτλ.

12. οὐδὲ δεόμενον ἀποφεύγειν: we should hardly repeat the negative, which in the Greek still belongs to δίκαιον. 'And try to get off by begging.'

 καὶ τῷ θεῷ κρῖναι περὶ ἐμοῦ ὅπῃ μέλλει ἐμοί τε ἄριστα εἶναι καὶ ὑμῖν.

4. δοκῇ: sc. χαρίζεσθαι.

7. δεῖν: repeats the notion of ἀξιον contained in ἀξιούτε.

8. μήτε καλὰ . . . μήτε δίκαια μήτε ὅσια: the climax neatly brings to view the skillful transition to the thought of ἀσεβές and ἄθεον with which the defense closes.

9. ἄλλως τε κτλ.: 'most especially, by Heaven, when I am standing on my defense against a charge of impiety preferred by Meletus here!'

10. εἰ πείθοιμι: not πείθειν in the proper sense, but δέόμενον πείθειν is meant; following the thought of δέόμενον ἀποφεύγειν, above c.

 The meaning is made doubly clear by τῷ δεῖσθαι in the latter part of the phrase.

11. θεοὺς . . . εἶναι: for the arrangement, see the note on δεινούς . . . λέγειν 17 B.

12. ἀτεχνῶς: see the Index.

15. ὡς οὐδεὶς: in our idiom,
 'more truly than any.'—To the Platonic Socrates, the religious instinct and the instinct of right-doing were one and the same thing.

Such an issue of the trial, the vote that has been announced, the verdict of GUILTY, — many are the reasons, the condemned man avers, why it disturbs him not at all. Surely a larger majority for condemnation might have been expected. As it is, had only thirty votes changed sides, he would at this moment actually be free. Three accusers it has required, working together, to accomplish this result! Where would the little man who filed the indictment be now, if the other two had not given him their support?

1. Τὸ μὲν μὴ ἀγανακτεῖν: 'that I should not be repining.' The grammatical connection of the phrase with what follows is very loose. Cp. τὸ δὲ 23 A, and the note. The correlative of μὲν occurs below 36 B, τιμᾶται δ' οὖν. — Before passing to the business in hand (the ἀντιμίμησις), Plato presents, in a brief preliminary paragraph, a picture of the unmoved demeanor of the sage at this critical moment, after the hostile verdict has been rendered. The sketch is made to include further contemptuous satire at the expense of the prosecutors, as well as certain historical features of the event.

2. ἅλλα τε . . . καὶ οὐκ ἀνέλπιστον: of the numerous circumstances contributing to his calm reception of the result of the ballot, the speaker is concerned to mention now merely the fact that an unfavorable issue was expected by him. For ἅλλα τεκαί, see Index, ἄλλος.

3. τὸν γεγονότα ἀριθμόν: 'the result of the count,' we should say.

4. οὕτω παρ' ὀλίγον: 'by so small a majority.'

5. εἰ τριάκοντα . . . μετέπεσον . . . ἀποπεφεύγη ἄν: 'had only thirty of the ballots changed sides, I should stand acquitted.' Note the meaning of the pluperfect tense here. For the numerical statement, see Index, δικαστής.

Μέλητον μὲν οὖν, ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκῶ, καὶ νῦν ἀποπέφευγα, καὶ οὐ μόνον ἀποπέφευγα, ἀλλὰ παντὶ δῆλον τοῦτό γε, ὅτι, εἰ μὴ ἀνέβη Ἄνυτος καὶ Λύκων κατηγορήσουντες ἐμοῦ, κἂν ὦφλε χιλίας δραχμάς, οὐ μεταλαβὼν τὸ πέμπτον μέρος τῶν ψήφων.

Τιμᾶται δ' οὖν μοι ὁ ἀνὴρ θανάτου. εἶεν· ἐγὼ δὲ δὴ τίνος ὑμῖν ἀντιτιμῆσμαι, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι; ἢ δῆλον ὅτι τῆς ἀξίας; τί οὖν; τί ἀξίός εἰμι παθεῖν ἢ ἀποτεῖσαι, ὅ τι μαθὼν ἐν τῷ βίῳ οὐχ ἡσυχίαν ἤγον, ἀλλ' ἀμελήσας

1. Μέλητον μὲν: 'so far as Meletus is concerned.'

4. κἂν ὦφλε χιλίας δραχμάς κτλ.: Index, γραφή. The suggestion that of the 280 votes against Socrates each of the accusers had earned only his third, so that any one of the men alone would have secured less than 100, is of course not serious, but satirical. It makes Meletus appear rather small, while Anytus and Lyco do not loom up very large.

Well then, for the death penalty proposed he must name a counter-penalty, that his judges may make their choice between the two. What, indeed, is a fair valuation (some requital to be borne in body or in money paid) of that offense whereof he has been deemed guilty? — he who would not attend to his concerns, the common concerns of money-making, office-holding, ambition, faction,—for what true man would be suffered to help his fellows in SUCH ways?—but in the way of private life brought his benefactions home to all—exhorting each and every one to care less for the body than for the soul, less for the show than for the reality. What, he asks, is a fair reward for such a benefactor, who is poor withal and needs leisure to carry on his good work? — Even the same reward as victors in the chariot-race receive, less deserving as they are than he, and nowise needy,—to eat at the public table in the Prytaneum.

6. Τιμᾶται δ' οὖν κτλ.: 'now then, he sets the value of my offense at death'; i.e. proposes for it the death penalty. Index, τιμᾶν, δίκη.

9. ὅ τι μαθὼν κτλ.: 'for that I would not, etc.' For τί (ὅ τι) μαθὼν, 'wherefore,' see Index, μαρθάνειν.

ὥνπερ οἱ πολλοί, χρηματισμοῦ τε καὶ οἰκονομίας καὶ στρατηγιῶν καὶ δημηγοριῶν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀρχῶν καὶ ξυνωμοσιῶν καὶ στάσεων τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει γιγνομένων, ἡγησάμενος ἑμαυτὸν τῷ ὄντι ἐπιεικέστερον εἶναι ἢ ὥστε εἰς ταῦτ' ἰόντα σφύζεσθαι, ἐνταῦθα μὲν οὐκ ἦα, οἱ ἐλθὼν μήτε ὑμῖν μήτε ἑμαυτῷ ἔμελλον μηδὲν ὄφελος εἶναι, ἐπὶ δὲ τὸ ἰδίᾳ ἕκαστον εὐεργετῆν τὴν μεγίστην εὐεργεσίαν, ὡς ἐγὼ φημι, ἐνταῦθα ἦα, ἐπιχειρῶν ἕκαστον ὑμῶν πείθειν μὴ πρότερον μήτε τῶν ἑαυτοῦ μηδεὶς ἐπιμελεῖσθαι, πρὶν ἑαυτοῦ ἐπιμεληθεῖν, ὅπως ὡς βέλτιστος καὶ φρονιμώτατος ἔσοιτο, μήτε τῶν τῆς πόλεως, πρὶν αὐτῆς τῆς πόλεως, τῶν τε ἄλλων οὕτω κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον

1. ὥνπερ οἱ πολλοί: ἐπιμελοῦνται, the opposite of ἀμελήσας, must be mentally supplied here.

4. ἐπιεικέστερον . . . ἢ ὥστε . . . σφύζεσθαι: 'too fair a man to go into that sort of thing and still live.' Cp. 31 E.

5. ἐνταῦθα μὲν οὐκ ἦα: adapted to εἰς ταῦτ' ἰόντα. Altho' the sentence at this point acquires the form of a finite verb (passing from the participial form), yet the thought is still negative (resumptive of ἀμελήσας κτλ.) as far as μὲν extends its force. The positive thought, required by ἀλλά, after οὐχ ἡσυχίαν ἦγον, enters with the δέ clause, coming to view decisively in ἐνταῦθα ἦα.

5. οἱ ἐλθὼν . . . ἔμελλον μηδὲν ὄφελος εἶναι: cp. ὅς . . . ἔμελλεν . . . ποιήσιν 20 A, and the note.

Here also the relative clause denotes finality (hence μή, μήτε): 'whither going I were sure to be of no use.' Index, μέλλειν.

8. ἐπιχειρῶν κτλ.: explanatory of τὴν μεγίστην εὐεργεσίαν, and a reminiscence and brief review of what he has already said 29 D.

9. τῶν ἑαυτοῦ: τὰ ἑαυτοῦ, opposed to ἑαυτοῦ; as, just below, τὰ τῆς πόλεως and αὐτὴ ἡ πόλις are opposed to each other. In the earlier passage (29 D-30 B), σώματα, χρήματα, δόξα, τιμὴ answer to τὰ ἑαυτοῦ here; φρόνησις, ἀλήθεια, ἀρετή, ἡ ψυχὴ answer to ἑαυτοῦ.

12. τῶν . . . ἄλλων . . . κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον: i.e. in all things setting reality above appearance, the essential above the unessential, the spiritual above the material.

Δέπιμελείσθαι· τί οὖν εἰμὶ ἄξιος παθεῖν τοιοῦτος ὢν ; ἀγαθόν τι, ὧ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, εἰ δεῖ γε κατὰ τὴν ἀξίαν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ τιμᾶσθαι· καὶ ταῦτα ἀγαθὸν τοιοῦτον ὃ τι ἂν πρέποι ἐμοί. τί οὖν πρέπει ἀνδρὶ πένητι εὐεργέτη, 5 δεομένῳ ἄγεω σχολὴν ἐπὶ τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ παρακελεύσει ; οὐκ ἔσθ' ὃ τι, ὧ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, πρέπει οὕτως, ὥς τὸν τοιοῦτον ἄνδρα ἐν πρυτανείῳ σιτεῖσθαι, πολὺ γε μᾶλλον ἢ εἴ τις ὑμῶν ἵππῳ ἢ ξυνωρίδι ἢ ζεύγει νενίκηκεν Ὀλυμ- 9 πίαςιν. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ὑμῖς ποιεῖ εὐδαίμονας δοκεῖν εἶναι, Εἰγὼ δὲ εἶναι· καὶ ὁ μὲν τροφῆς οὐδὲν δεῖται, ἐγὼ δὲ δέομαι. εἰ οὖν δεῖ με κατὰ τὸ δίκαιον τῆς ἀξίας τιμᾶ- 37 A σθαι, τούτου τιμῶμαι, ἐν πρυτανείῳ σιτήσεως.

1. τί οὖν . . . τοιοῦτος ὢν : the question that ushered in this noteworthy paragraph is repeated (hence οὖν) at its close.

2. εἰ δεῖ γε κτλ. : 'if I am indeed to set my reward at its true value'; referring to ἡ δῆλον ὅτι τῆς ἀξίας, above B.

4. εὐεργέτη : this word, prepared for by εὐεργετεῖν, εὐεργεσίαν, has almost the force of a title. Index, πρυτανεῖον.

10. τροφῆς οὐδὲν δεῖται : only the wealthy could afford to compete in the hippodrome. Cp. the designation of the horse by Aeschylus as ἄγαλμα τῆς ὑπερπλοῦτος χλιδῆς, Prom. 466. The winner in the horse-race had evinced no personal prowess; he need not have been present even at the contest.

37 A-D

Again, no contumacy is here, but the condemned man is one (tho' in so brief a space as Athens grants to questions of life and death the thing cannot be made clear to minds clouded by prejudice) — he is one whose convictions render it impossible for him deliberately to wrong a human being. To propose a counter-penalty now were to wrong HIMSELF, by pronouncing guilty one who is innocent. And what motive might there be for so doing? Surely no fear of death, which is to be feared not at all — while the substitutes therefor, imprisonment, for non-payment of fine or otherwise, and exile, are evils truly to be dreaded. Imprisonment : slavery to a fickle magistracy! Exile: the life of a wanderer, more than ever misunderstood!

1. Παραπλησίως . . . ἀπαυθαδιζόμενος: see 34 E, οὐκ αὐθαδιζόμενος κτλ.

3. τὸ δέ: cp. τὸ δὲ κινδυνεύει 23 A.

4. ἐκὼν εἶναι: 'if I can help it.' In this phrase, employed in negative statements, the infinitive εἶναι is idiomatic and untranslatable. Cp. Crit. 43 D, and the note.

5. ὑμᾶς τοῦτο οὐ πείθω: 'I fail to make you believe this'; viz. his settled determination wittingly to wrong no living man. Index, πείθειν. Could Socrates have convinced his judges on this point (self-evident as it was to any one who knew him), they would have seen that he was incapable of that which his accusers charged him with doing (διαφθείρειν τοὺς νέους), and would have comprehended why it was impossible for him to propose any punishment for himself, knowing himself to be an innocent man. In fact, Socrates declined to name any counter-penalty whatever for the consideration of the court. It has suited the purposes of Plato in the Apology to represent him as proposing, first a reward, 36 D, and later a fine, 38 B. But in what here immediately follows, Plato presents the real Socrates, once more, with admirable force. Xenophon, with his limited insight and penetration, can find no worthier motive for the master's lofty demeanor at the trial than the thought of declining powers and diminished enjoyment of life in extreme old age. Xen. Apol. 32, Mem. 4. 8. 1, 8.

6. διειλέγμεθα: note the characteristic word.

7. ὥσπερ . . . ἄλλοις: the Lacedaemonians, for example. The passage contains a passing censure of the flippancy of judicial procedure that marks an irresponsible democracy.

5. καλὸς . . . ἂν μοι ὁ βίος εἴη: 'a fine life indeed would be mine'; defined by ἐξελθόντι . . . ζῆν.

Ay, the same misunderstanding in exile as at home. For his conversations cannot cease; the divine command must be obeyed; the questioning of souls shall continue, while life lasts, because the life unquestioned (he avers) is valueless. Nor, once more, is he capable of thus harming himself, by proposing exile. The payment of a fine, however, if it could be paid, were no harm—and here are friends who bid him name a goodly sum of money, on their word and bond.

12. Σιγῶν δὲ . . . ζῆν: 'but by keeping still and minding your business, Socrates, will you not be able, pray, to live in exile?'

1. ἐάν τ' αὖ κτλ. : the preceding sentence began somewhat as if the speaker were going to say, ἐάν τε γὰρ λέγω ὅτι τῷ θεῷ ἀπειθεῖν τοῦτ' ἐστὶν κτλ., ἐάν τε ὅτι καὶ τυγχάνει μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν ὃν . . . τοῦτο, οὐ πείσεσθέ μοι. But the conclusion οὐ πείσεσθε enters independently after the first ἐάν τε. Accordingly, to the second ἐάν τε is added αὖ, giving to the whole period a form similar to εἰ μὲν . . . εἰ δέ. Cp. εἴτε . . . εἰ δὲ μή, 33 D.

5. ὁ δὲ ἀνεξέταστος βίος . . . ἀνθρώπῳ : 'while the unexamined life is no life for man to live.'

5. ταῦτα δὲ . . . λέγοντι : 'when I say that, etc.' In δέ there is a virtual repetition of αὖ above. Cp. τοῦ δέ . . . τούτου δέ, 32 D.

6. τὰ δέ : cp. τὸ δέ 38 A, 39 C.

7. καὶ ἐγὼ ἅμα κτλ. : 'and, besides, I am not in the habit, etc.'; recurring to the sentiment expressed 37 B. The remark affords an easy transition to the proposal which follows. He says, in effect : 'Exile is an evil. The suggestion of a fine, however, I put aside just now, in view of the consequences of non-payment, not because I regard a fine as an evil in itself. For, if I had money, I would propose as large an amount as I were likely to pay off.'

8. εἰ μὲν γὰρ . . . ἐβλάβην : the time implied, throughout the sentence, is present. Note that the conditionals are expressed by the imperfect, the conclusions by the aorist.

9. νῦν δὲ . . . τιμῆσαι : 't is impossible, however, for I have it not — unless, to be sure, I name the sum I could pay, and you will fine me in that amount.' — One μνᾶ to θάνατος!

οὐ γὰρ ἔστιν, εἰ μὴ ἄρα ὅσον ἂν ἐγὼ δυναίμην ἐκτεῖσαι, τοσούτου βούλεσθέ μοι τιμῆσαι. ἴσως δ' ἂν δυναίμην ἐκτεῖσαι ὑμῖν μᾶν ἀργυρίου· τοσούτου οὖν τιμῶμαι. The price to them of relief a trifle sooner gained (thus, tarrying after his sentence, he speaks to those who have confirmed it) — the price paid for cutting short an old man's waning years, shall be eternal reproach to Athens, slayer of the philosopher Socrates. Doubtless they still imagine that he could not find the words to win from them the boon of life — when, in truth, he could not find it in himself to descend to unworthy, slavish demeanor, like one who on the field of battle flings away his arms and begs the pursuing foe for quarter. Death the coward may avoid, but Infamy he may not avoid. Death, the slow runner, has caught the slow and aged Socrates. Infamy, the swift, has overtaken his accusers, those spry men. His sentence is to die; theirs, to live the life of the wicked and unjust. Thus was it bound to be, that each might have his due portion.

9. Οὐ πολλοῦ γ' ἔνεκα χρόνου: 'for no long respite's sake'; for the sake of being rid of him but a few years sooner than if they had waited for his natural death (τὸν αὐτόματον θάνατον).

10. ὑπὸ: 'at the hands of.' The preceding phrase is passive in sense.

4. μὴ οὐ τοῦτ' ἢ χαλεπόν: 'maybe this is not the thing that's difficult.' Index, μῆ.

6. χαλεπώτερον: death outruns a man in the end, of course; but infamy is apt to overtake him first. The keenest satire is concealed in the rhetorical flavor of this whole passage. Note the alliteration, θάττον γὰρ θανάτου θεῖ.

8. δεινοὶ καὶ ὀξεῖς: 'clever and speedy.'

10. ὀφλῶν . . . ὠφληκότες: note the aorist and the perfect: 'sentenced' and 'under sentence.' So the respective penalties were ἀποθανεῖν and μοχθηροὺς καὶ ἀδίκους εἶναι.

12. ταῦτα μὲν που κτλ. The sentence is transitional. ταῦτα μὲν, resumptive of the proceedings of the trial, as contrasted with its sequel, τὸ δὲ δὴ μετὰ τοῦτο, at the beginning of the following paragraph. 'Thus far, doubtless, it was quite inevitable that the issue should be what it is, and I believe the apportionment is about fair.'

13. μετρίως: as measured out by even-handed Justice. Note σχεῖν and ἔχειν.

It is at the hour of approaching death that the spirit of prophecy awakes. To those who by the fatal ballot have sought to avenge themselves upon their victim he will foretell the vengeance that shall yet be wreaked on them in turn—

Τὸ δὲ δὴ μετὰ τοῦτο ἐπιθυμῶ ὑμῖν χρησμοφθεῖναι, ὧς καταβηφισάμενοί μου. καὶ γὰρ εἰμι ἤδη ἐνταῦθα ἐν ᾧ μάλιστα ἄνθρωποι χρησμοφθοῦσιν, ὅταν μέλλωσιν ἀποθανεῖσθαι. φημι γάρ, ὧ ἄνδρες, οἱ ἐμὲ ἀπεκτόνατε, 5 τιμωρίαν ὑμῖν ἤξειν εὐθὺς μετὰ τὸν ἐμὸν θάνατον πολὺ χαλεπωτέραν νῆ Δία ἢ οἶαν ἐμὲ ἀπεκτόνατε· νῦν γὰρ τοῦτο εἰργάσασθε οἰόμενοι μὲν ἀπαλλάξεσθαι τοῦ διδόναι ἔλεγχον τοῦ βίου, τὸ δὲ ὑμῖν πολὺ ἐναντίον ἀποβή- 9 σεται, ὡς ἐγὼ φημι. πλείους ἔσονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἐλέγξον- D τες, οὓς νῦν ἐγὼ κατέιχον, ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ ἡσθάνεσθε· καὶ χαλεπώτεροι ἔσονται ὅσῳ νεώτεροί εἰσιν, καὶ ὑμεῖς μᾶλλον ἀγαπάκτῃσθε. εἰ γὰρ οἴεσθε ἀποκτείνοντες ἀνθρώ- 15 πους ἐπισχῆσεν τοῦ ὀνειδίζειν τινὰ ὑμῖν ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθῶς ζῆτε, οὐκ ὀρθῶς διανοεῖσθε. οὐ γὰρ ἔσθ' αὕτη ἡ ἀπα- 15 λαγὴ οὔτε πάνυ δυνατὴ οὔτε καλὴ, ἀλλ' ἐκείνη καὶ καλλίστη καὶ ῥάστη, μὴ τοὺς ἄλλους κολοῦειν, ἀλλ' ἑαυτὸν παρασκευάζειν ὅπως ἔσται ὡς βέλτιστος. ταῦτα more questioners and censors, and more alert than he, probing deeper and more painfully. For (he adds) accountability for wrong living is not to be evaded by cutting off him who calls for the account. The life itself must be looked to and made good.

1. Τὸ . . . μετὰ τοῦτο: 'that which is to come hereafter.'

2. ἐνταῦθα . . . ὅταν μέλλωσιν ἀποθανεῖσθαι: the Iliad furnishes the earliest examples. The dying Patroclus prophesies the death of his slayer Hector, II 851; and Hector, at the moment of fulfillment of that prophecy, foretells the fate of Achilles, X 358.

5. τιμωρίαν . . . πολὺ χαλεπωτέραν . . . ἢ οἶαν ἐμὲ ἀπεκτόνατε: 'a vengeance . . . far sterner, by Heaven, than such as ye have claimed by slaying me.'

6. οἶαν: sc. τιμωρίαν, Cognate Accusative.

9. οἱ ἐλέγξοντες: above all, Plato himself. Witness the Apology.

17. ταῦτα μὲν κτλ.: resumptive and transitional, as at the close of the preceding paragraph, B.

Turning now to his friends, to those who would not by their votes fasten guilt upon the innocent man — to them, the only judges rightly so named, ministers of right, he would fain address a word or two, in the few moments yet to spare. His way, forth from his house at daybreak, up to the courtroom, from hence presently to the prison — it was, as now appears, the way to DEATH. But lo! the divine monitor, ever prompt heretofore, during a long life, to check the slightest movement toward evil, has to-day from first to last been silent. How, therefore, he asks, can it be other than a good thing that impends?

3. Ὑπὲρ τοῦ . . . πράγματος: 'about the thing that has here occurred'; viz. the being sentenced to death. So below, vague general terms are mostly employed to designate the event.

4. ἐν ᾧ . . . ἄγουσι: 'while the officials (the Eleven) are busy'; viz. with the formalities preliminary to conducting the condemned man to prison. A few remarks were doubtless often permitted during this interval — very likely to Socrates himself. At any rate, Plato finds here an adequate motive for the impressive sentences which conclude the Apology.

6. ἀλλὰ μοι κτλ.: 'nay, I pray you, gentlemen, tarry by me thus long.' Note the pathos in ἀλλὰ μοι; also the informal word διαμυθολογῆσαι. Index, ἀλλά.

9. τί ποτε νοεῖ: 'as to its possible significance.' The interrogation takes ποτέ, because the inquiry must be purely speculative.

10. ὦ ἄνδρες δικασταί: this, the form of address proper to an Athenian court, occurs here for the first time in the Apology, as said by Socrates. It is attributed to Meletus 26 D. Socrates is represented as conceding the title of 'dicast' (δίκη, δικάζειν) to those judges solely who had voted for his acquittal. By means of this device (which could have been conceived only after the result of the trial was known) Plato effects more than merely to add a new stroke of satire to his writing. He gains, by avoiding the specific judicial phrase, a term of wider application (ὡ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι), in fuller accord with these clear tones spoken out to the world at large and to posterity.

1. ἡ . . . μαντική: already designated as φωνή τις 31 D; below B, as τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ σημεῖον; in general, τὸ δαμόνιον. The prophetic character attributed to the sign comes naturally by virtue of its negative function—here thro' its silence.

2. ἐν μὲν τῷ πρόσθεν κτλ.: μέν, 'although.' While the formal antithesis enters with νυνὶ δέ, the substantial contrast is conveyed rather by ἐμοὶ δὲ κτλ., B.

9. ἐπέσχεν: 'checked.'

οὐ γὰρ ἔσθ' ὅπως οὐκ ἡναντιώθη ἂν μοι τὸ εἰωθὸς σημεῖον, εἰ μὴ τι ἔμελλον ἐγὼ ἀγαθὸν πράξειν.

Ἐννοήσωμεν δὲ καὶ τῇδε, ὡς πολλὴ ἐλπίς ἐστὶν ἀγαθὸν αὐτὸ εἶναι. δυοῖν γὰρ θάτερόν ἐστιν τὸ τεθνάναι· 5 ἡ γὰρ οἶον μηδὲν εἶναι μηδ' αἰσθησιν μηδεμίαν μηδε-

1. οὐ γὰρ ἔσθ' ὅπως κτλ.: 'for it cannot be that the usual sign would have failed to oppose me, were it not some good thing that I am going to experience.' πράττειν, 'fare,' often approaches closely to πάσχειν in meaning. Cp. ὁρθῶς πράξειν above A; ταύτην τὴν πράξιν B; and see the Index.

And when we reflect upon the matter, he goes on to say, strong is the hope that the end of this being is something beneficent and good. The end of life, the sleep that knows no waking—either it is sleep unbroken by a dream (thus the counterpart of those moments which alone during human existence are all-painless and unwearying); or, as the poets teach, it is the dream itself (for the just man, a vision of the just), in that region where he who has lived aright shall dwell forever among his fellows. There are no judges forsworn; only the true and the righteous; men who have died at the hands of injustice; all the great and good, women and men. There, be the penalty for philosophizing what it may, it certainly is not death. For there, if the tale be true, death and dissolution are known no more.

3. Καὶ τῇδε: 'this way, too'; viz. as follows—by the way of speculation, guided by intuition. Cp. 31 D, where he approves the voice which had forbidden him to enter public life (παγκάλως).

4. αὐτό: 'it'; the event (τὸ ξυμβεβηκός). Cp. αὐτά, 'them,' 39 B, end.

4. τὸ τεθνάναι: not ἀποθανεῖν. Not the passage (aorist), but the ensuing state (perfect).

5. ἡ γὰρ οἶον . . . τὸν τεθνῶτα, ἡ . . . εἰς ἄλλον τόπον: the alternatives are stated briefly and succinctly in advance. 'T is either to be as nothing and to have no perception of anything at all when you are dead, or, as we are told, there is perchance a change of some sort, and the soul goes from hence to dwell in another place.' Stated in hypothetical form, the first alternative would stand, οἶον εἰ μηδὲν εἶη μηδ' αἰσθησιν . . . ἔχαι ὁ τεθνεώς.

3. καὶ εἴτε κτλ.: consideration of the first alternative. This extends as far as μία νύξ E.

6. εἴ τινα . . . δέοι κτλ.: 'supposing one were to select, etc.' In translating, the specific meaning of δέοι ('had to select') hardly needs to be reproduced here or when repeated below.

8. καὶ . . . ἀντιπαραθέντα . . . δέοι σκεψάμενον εἰπεῖν: 'and, comparing (offsetting), etc. . . were to consider the matter, and state.'

11. οἶμαι: 'I believe'; repetition of ἐγὼ . . . οἶμαι, above.

11. μὴ ὅτι: Index, μῆ.

12. τὸν μέγαν βασιλέα . . . αὐτόν: 'the Great King himself.' Even he, popularly regarded as the happiest of mortals, would find a large balance in favor of μὴδὲν εἶναι over εἶναι.

14. κέρδος . . . λέγω: 'I, for one, account it a gain.'

15. οὕτω δὴ: 'under these conditions.'

16. εἰ δ' αὖ κτλ.: consideration of the second alternative.

16. ἀποδημησαι: adapted to μετοίκησις, above C.

2. εἰ . . . εὐρήσει: lively realization (more imaginative than ἐὰν εὖρω) of the supposed future event.

4. τοὺς ἀληθῶς δικαστάς: it is not in their functional capacity as judges that Minos and company are to be encountered in the other world; they are named as foremost among the δίκαιοι, or righteous, generally.

7. ἄρα φαύλη ἂν εἴη: cp. φαῦλοι γὰρ ἂν . . . εἶεν 28 B. Here the tone of the question demands the contrary of φαύλη as reply. 'It would be great!' Cp. θαυμαστῇ
 . . . ἡ διατριβή, below.

8. ἐπὶ πόσῳ ἂν τις . . . ὑμῶν:
 'how much, pray, would one of you give for that?' Index, δέχεσθαι.

10. ἔμοιγε καὶ αὐτῷ . . . ὅποτε ἐντύχοιμι κτλ.: 'for me most especially . . . what time I might fall in with Palamedes, etc.' See the names in the Index. For ἐπεὶ here, cp. 19 E, 20 A.

13. ἀντιπαραβάλλοντι κτλ.: comparing his own experiences with those of his fellow-martyrs, he fancies, would be far from uninteresting. Both the asyndeton (omission of γάρ) and the participle (instead of the infinitive ἀντιπαραβάλλειν) are due to the explanatory character of the sentence. The dative (ἀντιπαραβάλ-λοντι), while not unsuited to ἀηδές, is primarily adapted to ἔμοιγε καὶ

ἐγῶμαι, οὐκ ἂν ἀηδὲς εἴη. καὶ δὴ τὸ μέγιστον, τοὺς ἐκεῖ ἐξετάζοντα καὶ ἐρευνῶντα, ὥσπερ τοὺς ἐνταῦθα, διάγειν, τίς ἄρ' αὐτῶν σοφός ἐστιν καὶ τίς οἶται μὲν, ἔστιν δ' οὐ. ἐπὶ πόσῳ δὴ ἂν τις, ὧ ἄνδρες δικασταί, δέξαιτο

1. καὶ δὴ τὸ μέγιστον: 'and verily the greatest thing of all!' The ellipse of the verb is effective here where the jubilant tone of the passage culminates.

6. Ὀδυσσέα . . . Σίσυφον: illustrious examples of σοφία, but not exactly of the Socratic sort.

8. ἀμήχανον . . . εὐδαιμονίας: 'no end of happiness!' Cp. οὐδεμία μηχανή ('inconceivable') 27 E.

9. πάντως οὐ δήπου κτλ.: 'at all events they don't of course put men to death there for doing this thing.' Whatever may be the way of suppressing philosophers in Heaven, he says, it must at any rate be different from the way they have at Athens. The irony of the passage loses nothing by its pleasantry and charm. For the dreamless sleep of the first alternative, the second offers a sleep filled with a delightful dream. The absence of all sinister features in this poetic view consists with the sublime confidence of the sage, in his unswerving conviction, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνδρὶ ἀγαθῷ κακὸν οὐδὲν οὔτε ζῶντι οὔτε τελευτήσαντι.

41 D-End

Ay, so should ALL the righteous abide firm in the conviction, that, living or dying, for the GOOD man there can be naught but good. Under a divine care and guidance the action of such a man is ever for the best;—as now, the mystic monitor has not once diverted him from his course, because, as he clearly sees, 't was time at last to be free from labor and at rest. Thus the accusers and the authors of the fatal ballot (nowise to their praise) were the unwilling instruments of a beneficent design. Let them go on retaliating for the vexation of being roused from their sleep of ignorance, till full justice shall have been done. Even as Socrates has vexed them, so let them vex the sons of Socrates (should they prove unworthy), ikro' exhortation and reproach and awakening to a better life.

1. Καὶ ὑμᾶς: i.e. not himself only.

1. εὐέλπιδας: cp. πολλή ἐλπίς κτλ. 40 C, where he had his own case chiefly in view.

2. καὶ ἐν τι . . . ἀληθές: 'and bear this one thing in mind as just a piece of truth.'

5. ἀπὸ τοῦ αὐτομάτου: i.e. without a beneficent design.

7. ἀπηλλάχθαι πραγμάτων: 'to be rid of trouble,' or, as we say, to be at rest.

13. τιμωρήσασθε . . . λυποῦντες: said with the keenest irony, for ἐνεργετήσατε . . . ἐγείροντες (πα-ρακελεύομενοι). 'Take your satisfaction of them, gentlemen, by wearying them even in the same way as I was wont to weary you.' τιμωρήσασθαι implies a selfish motive on the part of the subject, never present in the mind of Socrates.

4. δίκαια πεπονθὼς . . . αὐτός τε καὶ οἱ υἱεῖς: 'I shall have earned retribution at your hands—I and my sons.' The phrasing is equivocal and profoundly suggestive.—

When Athens comes to direct her actions according to the principles of Socrates, then and not till then will she have atoned for the wrong done to him and his.

Socrates, awaking at an early hour, finds his friend Crito seated by his bedside in the prison.—Crito, after explaining why he had refrained from disturbing the placid sleep of the prisoner, announces that the sacred galley has been sighted off Cape Sunium, on its return voyage from Delos. Hence, apparently, the execution of Socrates is close at hand.

But with ἀλλὰ καί he hastens to correct the implied suggestion that Socrates can be affected as an ordinary man would be affected in his situation.

2. ἐν καιρῷ τινι: Index, κινδυνεύειν.

5. ὦ Σώκρατες κτλ.: reminiscence from the Iliad. Achilles threatens to set sail for home on the morrow, adding: εἰ δέ κεν εὐπλοῖται δῶ κλυτὸς ἐννοσίγαιος, | ἡματί κεν τριτάτῃ Φθίην ἐρίβωλον ἴκοίμην. I 363.

8. ἐναργὲς μὲν οὖν: 'say rather, manifest.'

9. λίαν γε, ὥς ἔοικεν: 'its meaning is only too clear, apparently.' To Socrates the thought of 'going home' has been uppermost here; to Crito the thought of the predicted death, as such. — With the words ὥς ἔοικεν Crito dismisses the subject of the dream, to come to the matter in hand.

Crito now urges the true purpose of his errand: to gain, even at the eleventh hour, Socrates' consent to make good his escape and save his life by the means which his friends have provided. His refusal so to act will be neither believed nor comprehended. Popular opinion will hold Crito to have been too stingy to rescue Socrates. — The philosopher rejoins that the popular opinion is of little account in the matter. Sensible people will view the event in its true light. Popular bodies, the vulgar masses, are, to be sure, agents of mischief often enough, as chance may dictate; but their views are of no value, for ABILITY or CAPACITY of working either good or evil they have not.

9. ὦ δαιμόνιε: here said in a

5. ταύτης: sc. τῆς δόξης; explained by ἥ δοκεῖν κτλ.

13. τὰ παρόντα νυνί: i.e. the present plight of Socrates, a prisoner awaiting his execution, condemned to death by a popular dicastery. These facts are said to be αὐτὰ . . . δῆλα, to contain in themselves the evidence, ὅτι κτλ.

16. ἐν αὐτοῖς διαβεβλημένος: the Apology affords ample commentary on this expression, 19 B and elsewhere (διαβολή, διέβαλλον, οἱ διαβάλλοντες, etc.).

are not, νῦν δὲ οὐδέτερα οἰοί τε). Index, iva. — There is a pointed significance here in οἰοί τε and δυνατοί. Socrates denies these predicates to persons whose actions are the result of mere chance and circumstance (ποιοῦσι . . . ὃ τι ἂν τύχῃσι), not governed by sound reflection and reasoned principle.

2. οὔτε . . . φρόνιμον οὔτε ἄφρονα . . . ποιῆσαι: 'they cannot make a man wise or foolish'; i.e. they cannot make one good or bad, are unable (of themselves) to do good or evil to any one. See the note on οὐ . . . θεμιτόν Apol. 30 D.

To Crito's inquiry, whether the attitude of Socrates is due to solicitude for his friends, in view of the pecuniary loss and the danger they are likely to incur in consequence of helping the prisoner to escape, the sage replies that he is moved by considerations of this sort and by a great many others also. But Crito urges that he is himself quite able to afford the outlay needed, including the expense of keeping the informers quiet; and that, even were his own ample means inadequate, other friends of Socrates, not citizens of Athens, are ready to supply the funds. He begs Socrates, accordingly, to dismiss such considerations; likewise to give himself no trouble about his remarks at the trial, as to the helpless condition in which he would be placed as an exile; Crito has friends in Thes-saly, for example, who will make the fugitive perfectly safe and comfortable.

5. Ἀρά γε μή: for the interrogative phrase, see Index, μή at end.

1. (μὴ) ἀποκάμης: 'spare no effort.'

1. ὁ λέγεις ἐν τῷ δικαστηρίῳ: see Apol. 37 D. Socrates must not allow himself to be disturbed by any little inconsistency that might be noted between his words at the trial and his actions now.

2. ὅτι οὐκ ἂν ἔχοις κτλ.: 'that you would be at a loss, as an exile, what to do with yourself.'

Continuing his plea, Crito ventures to express the opinion that Socrates even does wrong, in helping to consummate the machinations of his enemies by abandoning himself unnecessarily to death; by abandoning likewise his sons, gratuitously, to the sorry chances of orphanhood. Parents have duties toward their children, but Socrates, apparently, after all his life-long professions of virtue, chooses the easy way, not the brave way, in regard to his own. Crito is ashamed of the whole history. People will attribute to the philosopher and his friends a lack of courage from first to last—from the preliminary scenes of the needless trial, down to the concluding farce in the prison. Therefore, if trouble is not to be crowned with disgrace, let Socrates wisely avail himself of this last opportunity for deliberation.

rates would have consented to such a thing. For εἰσελθεῖν, cp. Apol. 29 C, and the note.

2. κακία . . . καὶ ἀνανδρία: the repetition (see above ἀνανδρία τινὶ) is due to the length of the period. The thought of δόξη also reappears under the form δοκῇ, as the speaker dwells on the final matter (τὸ τελευταῖον δὴ τουτί) about which he is so indignant. For διαπεφευγέναι, see the Index.

4. ὄφελος: cp. Apol. 28 B.

6. ἀλλά: 'nay.'

6. μᾶλλον δέ: 'or rather.'

7. βεβουλευσθαι: 'to have done with deliberation.' Here, as often, the perfect infinitive, by its idea of completion, affords a pointed and forcible mode of expression. So πεπράχθαι, just below. Cp. Apol. 41 D.

9. εἰ . . . περιμενούμεν: see the note on εἰ τιμωρήσεις Apol. 28 C.

What value is to be set upon Crito's zeal, that (says Socrates) is a question of RIGHT and WRONG. It behooves the two friends, then, to consider by the light of reason (the only light by which the sage can allow himself to be guided) whether one ought, or ought not, to act as Crito here advises. Arguments which Socrates has formerly advanced he cannot now repudiate because death threatens him. Unless those arguments can be refuted, they must stand. A fair starting point for the present consideration would be Crito's remark about the opinions of men — to consider whether in former conversations it was rightly affirmed, that some of those opinions are to be heeded, and others not. Was that said in earnest? And does Crito, whose judgment there is no impending calamity to warp, still concede that it was rightly said?—He does.—The opinions of the wise must be heeded; those of the foolish, not?—Yes.

1. Πολλοῦ ἀξία: sc. ἐστίν.

2. εἰ . . . εἴη: 'supposing it to consist with some degree of right.' For the non-committal form of the condition, cp. δοκεῖ καλὸν εἶναι, εἴ τις οἷός τ' εἴη (supposing one to be able, si quis possit) παιδεύειν ἀνθρώπους, Apol. 19 E.

5. τῶν ἐμῶν μηδενί: 'nothing that is in me.' τὰ ἐμά, the collective ἐγώ.

6. λογιζομένῳ: adapted to τῷ λόγῳ.

8. ἐπειδὴ: temporal, and explanatory of νῦν.

9. σχεδόν τι: see the Index.

11. οὐ μή: Index, οὐ.

12. ἂν πλείῳ . . . ἡμᾶς μορμολύττηται: 'tho' there be still more bugbears than are in evidence now whereby the power of the many may scare us, childlike.' πλείῳ, Cognate Accusative with μορμολύττηται.

1. ὃν σὺ λέγεις: above 44 C, D, 45 E.

2. ἐκάστοτε: i.e. on the various occasions when Crito had heard the subject discussed by Socrates.

4. κατὰδηλος . . . ὅτι . . . ἐλέγετο: sc. ὁ λόγος, in both clauses. ἄρα marks the ironical tone of the question. For ἄλλως, see the Index.

7. ἀλλοιότερος: the comparative degree is due to a feeling that the word (ἀλλοῖος, ἄλλος, opposed to ὁ αὐτός) is inadequate to the thought. 'More different,' i.e. less convincing.

8. ἐπειδὴ: 'now that'; cp. above B.

8. ἐάσομεν χαίρειν: cp. ἔασον αὐτὸ χαίρειν 45 A.

10. ὑπὸ τῶν οἰομένων τι λέγειν: 'by those who fancied they spoke to some purpose.' λέγειν τι, the opposite of οὐδὲν λέγειν. Here in contrast with ἄλλως, ἔνεκα λόγου, above. Index, λέγειν.

14. ὅσα γε τάνθρώπεια: 'at least in all human probability.' There are no circumstances in Crito's own situation to warp his judgment; and surely he cannot allow the impending death of his friend to distort his views, while those of Socrates himself remain unclouded. An appeal at once to Crito's fairness and fortitude.

It was further maintained that in matters pertaining to the body the opinion, the praise or blame, and the prescriptions, not of the many, but of the ONE expert or professional individual must be regarded by him who aims at bodily health and strength? — Yes, and truly so. — And he who disregards the opinion of the skilled adviser, and respects that of the ignorant multitude, will come to grief as to the body? — Assuredly he will. — Similarly, in questions of morals, of right and wrong, the opinion, not of the multitude, but of some ONE who possesses understanding, must be regarded by him who will not come to grief in matters pertaining to the soul — and the soul is a serious thing enough? — Indeed it is.

11. Δδ: marks a new step in the argumentation, still assumed as a reminiscence of former conversations (ἐλέγετο).

11. γυμναζόμενος ἀνὴρ κτλ.: the sentence is explanatory of τὰ τοιαῦτα. Hence the asyndeton.

12. τοῦτο πράττων: 'making a business thereof.'

47 D-48 B

But with ruined bodily health life is not worth living?—Certainly not.—Then, still less is life worth living, with a ruined moral nature—at least if the soul be more precious than the body?—It is more precious, by far.—Apparently, then, in matters of right and wrong, the words of the ONE must be followed, the voice of Truth, not the opinions of the many. If, however, it be urged that the many possess the power of putting men to death, the question arises, whether we nevertheless still affirm that not mere living, but living a good life, is the thing of value?—We do still affirm it.

4. Φέρε δὴ : marks still another step in the argumentation.

6. μὴ τῇ . . . δόξῃ : the arrangement is as if ἀλλὰ τῇ τῶν πολλῶν were to follow. The negative does not affect πειθόμενοι. 'By listening to the opinion of the wrong persons.'

13. ἀλλὰ . . . ἀρα : 'well then.' An a fortiori argument is implied in the emphatic μετ' ἐκείνου and by the tone of the question.

6. οὐκ . . . πάνν . . . οὕτω : 'not so very much'; putting it mildly. οὐ πάνν, often said with Attic reserve. Cp. Apol. 41 D.

7. ὁ ἐπαίων . . . ὁ εἷς . . . αὐτὴ ἡ ἀλήθεια : cp. above 47 D, εἴ τίς ἐστιν ἐπαίων (περὶ τῶν δικαίων καὶ ἀδίκων κτλ.). Index, ἐπαίειν. In the case of γυμνάζεσθαι the "one" could be named (the ιατρός or the παιδοτρίβης); likewise in other arts, such as music, orchestics, etc. But in regard to matters of purely moral conduct (where sacred law or bloodguiltiness was not concerned) there could be named at Athens, in the time of Plato and Socrates, no professional or authoritative adviser—as the priest or pastor would be consulted by good people in more modern days. Practically, in the scene here represented, the expert in the case was Socrates himself—a genuine one indeed, with his well-reasoned and consistent principle. Ἐγὼ . . . ἀεὶ τοιοῦτος, οἷος τῶν ἐμῶν μηδενὶ πείθεσθαι ἢ τῷ λόγῳ ὃς ἂν μοι λογιζομένῳ βέλτιστος φαίνεται 46 B. The εἷς is thus virtually identical with αὐτὴ ἡ ἀλήθεια personified, in the passage before us. So long as the sage remains true to himself he is sure not to go wrong.

9. εἰσηγεῖ : εἰσηγεῖσθαι, of establishing the premises for argumentation (τὰ ὁμολογημένα, τὴν ἀρχήν).

2. ὦ θαυμάσιε: marks the strong appeal to Crito's reason, as against his feeling and prepossession.

2. οὗτός τε . . . καὶ τόνδε αὖ σκόπει: 'not merely this argument . . . but, further, here is another assertion of ours for you to consider.' A new step in the way of premising, taken rather informally (τέ . . . καὶ αὖ).

8. τὸ δὲ εὖ κτλ.: the phrase εὖ ζῆν needs defining, to prevent confusion with a popular usage. Here, bene vivere = recte vivere.

48 B-E

The premises, accordingly, have been agreed upon, and the way is clear to reason out the problem, whether it is right or wrong for Socrates to defy the laws of Athens and seek to escape from his prison. Considerations of pecuniary loss, popular criticism, family concerns, life and death, and so on, are not for men who reason, but for the unreasoning multitude. If it be proved wrong to try to escape, the attempt must not be made? — Ay; but what, then, is to be done? — The discussion will show; and, if so conducted as to convince a friend, its issue will be more satisfactory than if the well-meaning friend were to be left unconvinced.

have often affirmed before, without regard to popular sentiment, that ALL wrong-doing is unhand-some and base?—They do reaffirm it.—And doing wrong is to be de-fined as doing wrong, harm, or evil to SOMEBODY?—It is.—And wrong-doing by way of retaliation, rendering evil for evil, is under no circumstances whatever right, no matter how great may be the provocation? Let Crito be cau-tious in acknowledging a principle which few men are ready to ad-mit—hence few there be with whom the present discussion were even possible. But this is Socra-tes' principle. Is it also Crito's?—It is.

If, now, a man is to perform and not to evade that which he acknowledges to be the right thing to do, then does Socrates, in attempting the proposed escape from prison, stand by his acknowledgments, or does he rather wrong somebody? — injuring certain persons, those in fact whom least of all in the world he should injure? — But who, pray, are they? — Well, supposing the LAWS of Athens were to present themselves in person to Socrates, on the eve of his absconding, and take him to task in view of this fine enterprise? — asking of him an opinion, what were likely to become of a state wherein the judgments of the courts are defied and set at naught by individuals? Conceivably he might reply that in his case the state was in error and the judgment false? — He might indeed so reply.

 δοκεῖ σοι οἷόν τε ἔτι ἐκείνην τὴν πόλιν εἶναι καὶ μὴ

1. Μᾶλλον δέ: 'or rather.'

3. ἐξαπατητέον: 'evaded,' we should naturally say. But the Greek word is stronger in its implication of falsehood.

6. μὴ πείσαντες τὴν πόλιν: cp. πείσας σε 48 E.

10. ἐννοῶ: 'comprehend.' Crito would like to be explicitly informed who these persons are. Plato's famous and most impressive personification of the Commonwealth (τὸ κοινὸν τῆς πόλεως) is thus dramatically introduced.

12. εἴθ' ὅπως . . . τοῦτο: 'or by whatever name we are to call this thing.' He would gladly find a milder designation than ἀποδιδράσκειν for that which Crito asks him to do, if the language afforded a word at once appropriate and reputable. Cp. πράττεις ἅπερ ἂν δοῦλος φανλότατος πράξειεν, ἀποδιδράσκειν ἐπιχειρῶν 53 D.

13. ἐπιστάντες: this word supplies a graphic touch helpful in realizing the imaginary scene. Cp. προσελθοῦσα in the account of the dream 44 A.

17. εἶναι: 'to stand,' 'exist.'

ἀνατετράφθαι, ἐν ᾗ αἱ γενόμεναι δίκαι μηδὲν ἰσχύουσιν, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ ἰδιωτῶν ἄκυροί τε γίνονται καὶ διαφθείρονται; τί ἐροῦμεν, ὦ Κρίτων, πρὸς ταῦτα καὶ ἄλλα τοιαῦτα; πολλὰ γὰρ ἂν τις ἔχοι, ἄλλως τε καὶ ῥήτωρ, εἰπεῖν ὑπὲρ

 C αὐτοὺς ὅτι ἡδίκηκε γὰρ ἡμᾶς ἡ πόλις καὶ οὐκ ὀρθῶς τὴν δίκην ἔκρινεν; ταῦτα ἢ τί ἐροῦμεν;

1. ἀνατετράφθαι: i.e. ἀνατετραμμένην ('subverted') εἶναι, 'to be as nothing.'

1. αἱ γενόμεναι δίκαι: 'the judgments rendered.' More explicitly below, τὰς δίκας τὰς δικασθείσας.

2. ἄκυροί . . . γίνονται: 'are foiled.' For γίνεσθαι in periphrasis with passive sense, see the Index.

4. ἄλλως τε καὶ ῥήτωρ: an allusion to Athenian procedure in the presentation of a formal plea by an advocate (one of the σύνδικοι or συνήγοροι) upon the question of the abrogation of a law. A sort of apologetic reference by Plato, in view of the eloquent defense he is himself about to put into the mouth of laws personified.

5. ἀπολλυμένου: 'threatened with ruin as it is.' Note the effect of the imperfect stem, and cp. ἐπιχειρεῖς ἡμᾶς ἀπολλύναι C.

6. ἡ ἐροῦμεν κτλ.: Socrates anticipates the objection that would naturally be raised by Crito, thus affording a quick transition to the next step in the argument. For the future indicative in this question, compare the following note on ἂν εἴπωσιν οἱ νόμοι.

50 C-51 C

Standing before him now in his prison the Laws of the Commonwealth propound to Socrates the solemn and startling question, whether in the tacit agreement entered into by every citizen with his country it is really assumed that he will obey her ordinances only when he deems them justly administered, and not unexceptionally and always. This contract implies on the part of the citizen an approval of the regulation of marriage by the state, and involves a surrender of his individual rights to the welfare of the community, whose privileges he has thus by birth, rearing, and education been enabled to enjoy.

ΚΡ. Ταῦτα νῆ Δία, ὦ Σώκρατες.

ΣΩ. Τί οὖν, ἂν εἴπωσιν οἱ νόμοι· ὦ Σώκρατες, ἡ καὶ ταῦτα ὠμολόγητο ἡμῖν τε καὶ σοί, ἡ ἐμμένειν ταῖς δίκαις αἷς ἂν ἡ πόλις δικάζῃ; εἰ οὖν αὐτῶν θαυμάζομεν 5 λεγόντων, ἴσως ἂν εἴποιεν ὅτι, ὦ Σώκρατες, μὴ θαύμαζε τὰ λεγόμενα, ἀλλ' ἀποκρίνου, ἐπειδὴ καὶ εἴωθας χρῆσθαι τῷ ἐρωτᾷν τε καὶ ἀποκρίνεσθαι. φέρε γάρ, τί ἐγκαλῶν 10 ἡμῖν καὶ τῇ πόλει ἐπιχειρεῖς ἡμᾶς ἀπολλύναι; οὐ πρῶτον

By the analogy of parentage, or of the relation between master and slave, if, as is admitted by common consent, powers are invested in the father or mother over the child, against which the child may not rebel or retaliate, even so, à fortiori, the citizen may not assert his individual will or judgment in defiance of the STATE, to which he owes his civil existence, and of which he forms an integral part. Is that the conceded view of the relation existing between the citizen and the city? — It is.

2. Ἄν εἴπωσιν οἱ νόμοι: here the form of the conditional clause (Supposition of the Possible) assumes boldly that the reader (along with the writer) has entered completely into the illusion of the scene depicted. Cp. Arist. Birds 1642 (Peithetaerus to Heracles) ἦν γὰρ ἀποθάνῃ ὁ Ζεὺς . . . πένης ἔσει σύ: where the comic effect depends upon the form of the condition; hypothesizing as possible precisely that which by the hypothesis implied in the word Ζεὺς (that of deathless beings designated by certain names) is impossible. Anything like εἰ Ζεὺς ἀποθάνοι would be feeble and witless here. The English subjunctive has the same effect as the Greek ('If Zeus die,' 'If the Laws say'). On the other hand, above 50 A, where the imaginary case is supposed for the first time, we naturally find the ideal form, εἰ οἱ νόμοι ἔρουντο. Cp. Cicero's well-known haec si tecum patria loquatur (εἰ διαλέγοιτο ἡ πατρίς) nonne impetrare debeat Cat. 1. 8.

2. ἡ καὶ ταῦτα ὠμολόγητο: 'was this really (καί) the agreement?' ταῦτα, i.e. that which is implied in the supposed objection, ἡ δίκη γὰρ ἡμᾶς ἡ πόλις κτλ.

3. ἐμμένειν: said significantly, 'to abide by' (simply and unconditionally).

μέν σε ἐγεννήσαμεν ἡμεῖς, καὶ δι' ἡμῶν ἐλάβανεν τὴν μητέρα σου ὁ πατήρ καὶ ἐφύτευσέν σε; φράσον οὖν, τούτοις ἡμῶν, τοῖς περὶ τοὺς γάμους, μέμφει τι ὡς οὐ καλῶς ἔχουσιν; — Οὐ μέμφομαι, φαίην ἄν. — Ἀλλὰ 5 τοῖς περὶ τὴν τοῦ γενομένου τροφήν τε καὶ παιδείαν, ἐν ᾗ καὶ σὺ ἐπαιδεύθης; ἥ οὐ καλῶς προσέταττον ἡμῶν

 σῷ σε ἐν μουσικῇ καὶ γυμναστικῇ παιδεύειν; — Καλῶς, Εφαίην ἄν. — Εἶεν. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐγένου τε καὶ ἐξετράφης
 10 καὶ ἐπαιδεύθης, ἔχouis ἄν εἰπεῖν πρῶτον μὲν ὡς οὐχὶ ἡμέτερος ἦσθα καὶ ἔκγονος καὶ δοῦλος, αὐτός τε καὶ οἱ

1. ἐγεννήσαμεν: cp. ἡμεῖς . . .
 γεννήσαντες 51 C, γεννηταῖς οὖσιν ἡμῖν 51 E. Also ἔκγονος (ἡμέτερος) 50 E. Figuratively speaking, the citizen owed his being to the commonwealth, inasmuch as the privileges of citizenship accrued to him only thro' the legitimacy assured by the laws regulating marriage. At Athens he must be descended from Athenian citizens both on the father's and the mother's side.

5. τοῦ γενομένου: 'of the child, once born'; marking the transition from γενέσθαι to τρέφεσθαι καὶ παιδεύεσθαι.

6. ἡμῶν οἱ ἐπὶ τούτοις τεταγμέ-νοι: 'such of us as pertain (have been assigned) thereto'; i.e. to τροφήν τε καὶ παιδείαν.

9. ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐγένου τε καὶ . . .
 ἐπαιδεύθης: again naming γενέσθαι,

for explicitness of reminder. Cp.
 51 C end.

10. πρῶτον μὲν: 'to begin with,'
 the citizen belongs to the state; in the next place, if that is true (εἰ τοῦθ' οὕτως ἔχει), he must demean himself accordingly. There is no formal correlative to πρῶτον μὲν expressed.

11. δοῦλος: cp. πρὸς τὸν δεσπότην, below. So far as personal liberty and equality before the law were concerned, Athenian speakers were in the habit of contrasting their own civil government with the condition of those living under Oriental despotism, whom they called δοῦλοι. In another way, however, as here, where matters of duty are in question, the analogy of master and slave may be fairly used in emphasizing the strong sense of absorption of the individual by the body politic which the ancients felt.

1. ἐξ ἴσου . . . εἶναι . . . τὸ δίκαιον : the meaning is elucidated by what follows in the text. Parents and their children do not stand mutually upon an equal footing in the matter of right and wrong. The father, for example, has a right to chastise his son ; but the son may not undertake to chastise his father in turn. If this be conceded, then still less (it is here argued) has the citizen a right to retaliate upon the state. For us, the analogy is less pertinent than it would have seemed to the ancient mind.

4. πρὸς μὲν . . . τὸν πατέρα οὐκ

ἐξ ἴσου ἦν . . . πρὸς δὲ τὴν πατρίδα . . . ἔσται κτλ. : for the form and force of the period, see the note on Apol. 37 C, D and compare the other passages there cited. Observe that here ἄρα appears in both members of the period.

6. κακῶς ἀκούοντα : Index, ἀκούειν.

10. καὶ σὺ δέ : 'When in like manner you.' Index, δέ.

14. μητρός τε καὶ πατρὸς . . . τιμιώτερον . . . ἢ πατρὸς . . . καὶ ἀγιώτερον : this forcible utterance, paradoxical as the doctrine inculcated may seem to us, could be addressed to and accepted by no man more consistently and properly than Socrates.

τῶν ἄλλων προγόνων ἀπάντων τιμιώτερόν ἐστιν ἡ πατρίς

 πόλις καὶ ἡ πατρίς, ἡ πείθειν αὐτὴν ἢ τὸ δίκαιον πέφυκε,

12. ἡ πείθειν αὐτήν: the infinitive construction follows very naturally after the verbal adjectives preceding (ποιητέον = ποιεῖν δεῖ). For πείθειν, cp. above B, below 51 E, διδάσκειν καὶ πείθειν Apol. 35 C.

12. ἡ . . . πέφυκε: 'where the right lies,' we should say. Here, as often, πέφυκε is hardly more than a weighty synonym of ἐστί. πέφυκε occurs in its strict proper sense Apol. 34 D. — If there is any fallacy or special pleading in the present passage, it consists in the assumption that juries representing the power of the state are regularly open to persuasion by truth and reason.

Such a view of the relation between state and citizen being conceded as the true one, it follows that Socrates in considering the plan of escape proposed to him contemplates WRONGING that author of his civil existence and its privileges which is his Country. That there is nothing harsh or arbitrary (the Laws contend) in their way of enforcing the contract, is witnessed by the fact that every citizen is left free to emigrate and absolve himself from its conditions by taking up his residence elsewhere. In remaining at home he seals the compact by his act, and in breaking it he is guilty of violating a pledge as well as of injuring his benefactors. Nor do they, the Laws of Athens, fail to grant him at the last moment, in case of dispute, an opportunity of proving himself free from error.

βιάζεσθαι δὲ οὐχ ὅσιον οὔτε μητέρα οὔτε πατέρα, πολὺ δὲ τούτων ἔτι ἤττον τὴν πατρίδα ; — Τί φήσομεν πρὸς ταῦτα, ὦ Κρίτων ; ἀληθῆ λέγειν τοὺς νόμους ἢ οὐ ;

6. Εἰ . . . ταῦτα ἀληθῆ λέγομεν : 'whether what we here say is true.' The absence of the article shows that ἀληθῆ is predicative. See notes on Apol. 18 A and 20 D. Cp. also ἀδίκᾳ αὐτὰ ἐργαζόμενοι above 48 D, and the notes ; where, however, the presence or absence of the article is not a factor in the interpretation.

6. οὐ δίκαια : bears the same grammatical relation to ἅ νῦν ἐπιχειρεῖς as ἀληθῆ above bears to ταῦτα, or as ἀδίκᾳ in the passage quoted bears to αὐτά.

10. τῷ . . . πεποιηκέναι : the dative expresses the means whereby the proclamation is virtually made.

11. δοκιμασθῇ : on the completion of his seventeenth year the Athenian entered upon his full rights as a citizen by being enrolled in his deme. At that time he must undergo a 'scrutiny' (δοκιμασία) as to the genuineness of his citizenship by descent.

13. ἐξεῖναι : object of προαγορεύομεν. ἔξεστί σοι ἀπιέναι would be the substance of the proclamation.

The Laws warn their prisoner, that by carrying into effect the contemplated design he will render himself liable in a surpassing degree to those charges which culminate in the reproach of breaking a solemn compact. His home-staying habit, his apparent preference for Athens over other cities, evinced by an extraordinary indisposition to sojourn elsewhere, renders SOCRATES' subscription to the civil contract unusually solemn and emphatical. Moreover, he has seen fit to rear children in Athens, that their lot may be in common with his own. Finally, of all men

Socrates could with the least grace evade by illegal means the execution of judgment, after deliberately and with an air of pride declining at the trial to allow the death penalty to be replaced by exile. Either then or at some earlier time in his long life might he have betaken himself elsewhere, perchance to one of those Dorian states which he has so often lauded. But now, in absconding, he will cover himself with disgrace and ridicule.

leges, and incur the same liabilities as their father. — Socrates, in fact, as we are amply informed by Xenophon and Plato, found much to criticise in the political constitution of his native city. It remains true, however, that the circumstances of Athenian life enabled him to work out his mission far more effectively than he could have done elsewhere in Hellas.

1. ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ δίκη κτλ.: 'at the trial itself,' finally. The argument of consistency here advanced is in the highest degree pertinent and cogent. It alone constrains the modern reader to commend unhesitatingly the decision of Socrates in the Crito, however strained some of the other pleading may appear. His utterances and his demeanor before the court, as attested alike by Xenophon and Plato, bound Socrates, above all men, to spurn the suggestion of an attempt to escape execution of the judgment. Crito's concession of this point we do not feel as a device of the Platonic dialogue.

Let Socrates reflect that by such a transgression, besides exposing his friends to peril, he will render himself an object of suspicion and distrust on the part of the law-abiding citizens of any reputable state in which he may take refuge; nor will there longer be room for doubting that the judgment of the Athenian court was sound. Further discourses by Socrates abroad, upon his favorite themes, will be unseemly enough! Better, doubtless, resort to such a community as would relish the tale of an aged convict's flight and would applaud its author — provided he could so conduct himself as to offend no man by independent speech or thought. As for his sons, if they are to enjoy the privilege of growing to man's estate in Athens, they still could not have the benefit of their father's presence. In his absence, his friends must provide for the children; and whether he be alive or dead they are incapable of neglecting them.

Wherefore, finally, it behooves Socrates not to be prevailed upon by his friend Crito, but to obey the Laws of his Country, which are to him as father and mother. Not by them, but at the hands of men, has he been wronged. And it were well, in appearing before the Laws of the Other World, to present himself, not as an ingrate and wrong-doer, but clean-handed, with just record and adequate defense.

N. B. The Index is not to the notes, but to the text of the Apology and Crito, and supplementary to the notes. All the proper names occurring in these two dialogues are registered, substantive and adjective; but as regards other words the Index is meant to be in no way exhaustive. Terms and phrases pertaining to Athenian law and other antiquities are recorded and briefly explained; likewise certain words characteristic of Plato's mode of expression or of the simple Socratic doctrines enunciated in the dialogues and needing fuller elucidation than there would be room for in the commentary. Finally, the Index has been made to comprise a number of familiar Greek words which have given rise to idioms or of themselves demand close and repeated observation on the learner's part. See, for example, ἀλλά, γίγνεσθαι, δοκεῖν, μέλλειν, μέν, μή, οὐδέ, πάσχειν, ποιεῖν.

ἀγών, -ώνος, δ: struggle, contest; as γυμνικός, ἱππικός, μουσικός, or of war. Also the trial of a case at law, δ ἀγών τῆς δίκης Crit. 45 E. εἰς ἀγῶνα καθιστάναι τινάς, 'to be putting men on trial,' i.e. summoning them before the courts, Apol. 24 C. ἀγῶνα ἀγωνίζεσθαι, 'to be undergoing a trial,' 34 C. See δίκη.

Ἀδείμαντος: Adimantus, son of Aristo and brother of Plato, present at the trial of Socrates, 34 A.

Ἅιδης: Hades, god of the Lower World. ἐν Ἅιδου, εἰς Ἅιδου, 'in,' 'into (the realm of) Hades,' 29 B, 40 E, Crit. 54 A, B, C.

Ἀλαός: Acacus, son of Zeus and Aegina, after his death one of the judges in the Lower World, 41 A. See Ῥαδάμανθους. Sons of Acacus were Telamon and Peleus, the fathers respectively of Ajax and Achilles.

Ἀλαντόδωρος: Aeantodorus, an Athenian, the brother of Apollodorus, present at the trial of Socrates, 34 A.

Ἀἴας, -αντος: Ajax, 41 B. Ajax the son of Telamon was called δ μέγας, 'the greater,' to distinguish him from 'the lesser' Ajax, son of Oileus. Telamonian Ajax is mentioned in the Apology as one of the ancients who perished in consequence of an unjust judgment. Thetis had proposed the arms of Achilles as a prize for that one of the Greeks who should be deemed to have done best in the battle over the body of her son on the plain of Troy. The arms were awarded to Ulysses, and the chagrin and resentment of Ajax at this decision led to his suicide. See the Odyssey λ 543 ff.

αἰρεῖν: to seize, take. ὁ λόγος αἰρεῖ, 'the argument constrains,' 'convinces,' Crit. 48 C. Mid. 'to choose.' Aor. act. and mid., ἐλεῖν, ἐλέσθαι 28 E. The passive, in the meaning take (or 'convict'), is expressed by ἀλλοκεσθαι, ἀλῶναι 38 D, 39 B. In the language of the Athenian courts αἰρεῖν is 'to convict,' 28 A. For the figure, cp. διώκειν (pursue), 'to prosecute,' ὁ διώκων, 'the plaintiff'; φεύγειν (fly), 'to be defendant,' ὁ φεύγων; ἀποφυγεῖν (escape), 'to be acquitted,' 38 D. See φεύγειν.

Ἀλκίβιης: Aeschines, an Athenian, son of Lysanias, present at the trial of Socrates, 33 E. He became a writer of dialogues, and is known as Aeschines "the Socratic," to distinguish him from Aeschines the orator.

ἀκούειν: to hear, 17 B, 19 D. εἶ, κακῶς ἀκούειν (equivalent to a passive of εἶ, κακῶς λέγειν), Lat. bene, male audire, 'to be well' or 'ill spoken of,' Crit. 51 A. See HA. 820, G. 1241, B. 513. A cognate accusative may take the place of the adverb, ἀκούσει ἀνάξια σουτοῦ, 53 E.

ἀλλά: but, regularly after a negative idea, 17 C. Often, with hortative or imperative constructions, in a tone of appeal or deprecation, 'nay.' See note on Apol. 39 E. ἀλλ' ὦ Σώκρατες, 'nay, Socrates,' Crit. 54 B; ἀλλά βουλεύου 46 A. In setting aside some proposal, as when one after the other of a series of suggestions is dismissed as not feasible, 'well.' ἀλλά χρημάτων, 'well, a fine then?' (after negating the proposed penalty of imprisonment); ἀλλὰ δὴ φυγῆς (setting aside the suggestion of a fine) Apol. 37 C. Sometimes, in the same usage, 'or,' ἀλλ' ἐκ μὲν τούτων τῶν τόπων ἀπαρεῖς Crit. 53 D. ἀλλὰ δὴ τῶν παίδων ἔνεκα 54 A. ἀλλὰ γάρ, 'but in truth,' 'in fact, however,' 'in fine,' is a condensed phrase leaving some part of the thought to be mentally supplied, Apol. 19 C, D, 25 C, 20 A, 28 A. Sometimes the phrase is divided by a word or two, ἀλλ' οὐ γάρ 20 C. ἀλλὰ γάρ is apt to occur when a lengthy discourse or argument is drawing near to its conclusion, 'but (enough) for,' etc. Apol. 42. ἀλλ' ἤ, 'except,' 'than,' after a negative idea. τίνα ἄλλον ἔχουσι λόγον ἀλλ' ἢ τὸν . . . δίκαιον 34 B. Cp. μὴ χρῆσθαι ἐλαίῳ ἀλλ' ἢ ὅτι σμικροτάτῳ Prot. 334 C. The unaccented ἀλλ' in this phrase is by some referred to ἄλλος (ἄλλο). ἀλλ' οὖν . . . γε, 'well then at any rate,' 'yet at any rate,' after some sort of a conditional statement, 27 C, 34 E.

ἄλλος, ἄλλη, ἄλλο: other, else. ἄλλα καὶ ἄλλα, 'now some things and now others,' 'first this and then that,' 27 B. οἱ τε ἄλλοι καὶ ὁ τῆς Θέτιδος υἱός, 'and above all the son of Thetis,' 28 C. ἄλλα τέ μοι πολλὰ συμβάλλεται καί, 'many things contribute to this result, but especially the fact,' etc. 36 A. Cp. Crit. 52 C. The phrase is most common in its adverbial form, ἄλλως τε καί, 'especially,' Apol. 26 E, 35 D. ἄλλο τι ἤ, interrogative phrase, expecting an affirmative answer. ἄλλο τι ἤ περὶ πολλοῦ ποιεῖ, 'do you not regard it as highly important?' 24 C, Crit. 50 A, 52 D.

ἄμαθια (μανθάνειν): ignorance, 25 E. But as specific opposite of σοφία the meaning is 'unwisdom,' 'folly,' 22 E, 29 B. See σοφία, εἰδέναι, φρόνησις.

Ἀμφίπολις, -ως, ἡ: Amphipolis, a town in Thrace, on the Strymon, named from its position with the river encompassing it on three sides, 28 E. An important dependency of Athens, Amphipolis fell into the hands of the Lacedaemonian commander Brasidas in the eighth year of the Peloponnesian War, 424 B.C. Two years later, in an unsuccessful attempt on the part of Athens to recover the place, both Brasidas and Cleon, the Athenian general, were killed. Thuc. 5. 10. The allusion in the Apology indicates that Socrates was present in the ranks at the Battle of Amphipolis.

ἀναβαίνειν: to go up. Frequently of ascending to the Pnyx, where the Popular Assembly (ἐκκλησία) was held, on the slope of a hill near the Areopagus, 31 C. Also of coming up before a court of justice, ἐπὶ δικαστήριον 17 D, 33 D, 36 D, 36 A, 40 B.

ἀναβιβάζεσθαι: the causative of ἀναβαίνειν. Of bringing persons into court or into the court-room, ἀναβιβάζεσθαι τινα 19 D, 34 C.

Ἀναξαγόρας: Anaxagoras, Ionic philosopher, 26 D. Born in Clazomenae about 500 B.C., he dwelt many years at Athens, upon terms of intimate friendship with eminent citizens such as Euripides and Pericles. His inquiries into the nature of things, substituting scientific theories in place of the personal agency of divine beings, led to a charge of blasphemy, in consequence of which he was compelled to leave Athens. Anaxagoras taught that νοῦς, mind, introduces order and symmetry into nature by initiating a rotatory movement, "the grand cosmical rotation." See Grote's Plato, vol. 1, c. 1. Only brief fragments remain of Anaxagoras' treatise On Nature (περὶ φύσεως).

Ἀντιφῶν, -ώντος: Antiphon, of the deme of Cephisia, the father of Epigenes, who was one of the followers of Socrates, present at the trial, 33 E. This Antiphon must be distinguished from Antiphon of the deme of Rhamnus, the celebrated orator.

ἀντωμοσία: see γραφῆ.

Ἄνυτος: Anytus, son of Anthemion, the most influential of the three accusers of Socrates, 18 B, 23 E, 29 C, 30 C, 31 A, 34 A, 36 A. He had been strategus and had held other important offices, and in the time of the Thirty Tyrants he was one of the exiles who returned with Thrasybulus (see φύγη), standing high thereafter in the councils of the Restored Democracy. We learn from Plato Men. 90 A that the father of Anytus had given his son an excellent education. Side by side with his political activity Anytus carried on the trade of a tanner. Thus in the Apology he is represented as acting on behalf of the artisans of the community in the prosecution of Socrates, 23 E. Anytus trained his own son to the tanner's business, but Socrates, who had observed signs of intellectual ambition in the youth, advised the father against such a course. The young man, he averred, would not abide by a slavish pursuit; and the consequence would be his moral ruin—a prediction that was shortly fulfilled. Thus Xen. Apol. 29 ff.

ἀξιος (ἀγειν) 3: worth, worthy, 23 A, B; properly of that which is equal to something else in weight, hence in value. τὰ πλείστων ἀξια, 'the most precious things', 29 E. τί ἀξίος εἰμι παθεῖν, 'what do I deserve to suffer?' 36 B. ἀξίων, 'worth while,' Crit. 53 C.

ἀξιόθιν: to deem worth or worthy, 38 A; 'to think right,' 'see fit,' 'deign,' 'ask,' 19 D. ἀξιῶσθε ('concede,' 'regard' the assumption 'as pertinent' to the case) διττοῦς μου τοὺς κατηγοροὺς γεγονέναι 18 D. ἕκαστος ἡξίου ('claimed') σοφώτατος εἶναι 22 D. οὐκ ἀξίῳ μὲν ἔγάρ γωγε, 'I do not indeed expect it of you,' 34 D, 35 C.

ἀπάγειν: to lead away. In Attic law, 'to bring before the magistrate,' by the process termed ἀπαγωγή, in cases of summary jurisdiction, as when an offender was taken in the act. Hence, 'to arrest and commit to prison,' 32 B. See ἐνδεικνύειν.

ἀποθνήσκειν: to die, to be killed or put to death; regularly employed as passive to ἀποκτείνειν 32 C. See HA. 820, G. 1241, B. 513. ἀποθανοῦμαι 29 C, 39 C, ἀπέθανον 32 D. These forms of fut. and aor. always in prose. See θνήσκειν.

Ἀπολλόδορος: Apollodorus, a follower of Socrates, present at the trial, 34 A. He is named as one of those who were ready to be sureties for Socrates if he would propose a fine as counterpenalty, 38 B. He was known as μανικός ('madman'), thus famous for his enthusiastic partiality for the master, Symp. 173 D. At the death scene in the prison by his lamentations he broke down every one present except Socrates himself, Phaed. 117 D.

ἀποφεύγειν: to escape; θάνατον 39 A. In Attic law, 'to be acquitted,' ἀποφυγεῖν τὴν δίκην 38 D, 36 A. δέμερον ἀποφεύγειν, 'to try to gain acquittal by entreaty,' 35 C. See φεύγειν, διαφεύγειν.

Ἀριστοφάνης, -ους: Aristophanes, chief poet of the Old Comedy, and the only one of whom an entire play has been preserved, 19 C. Eleven comedies of Aristophanes are extant, including the Clouds, which is directed against the Sophists, and offers the familiar figure of Socrates as representative of the class. The Clouds failed to receive a prize when exhibited 423 B.C., and in its present form shows considerable alterations of the original text, made apparently with a view to a second representation. Aristophanes' attack upon Socrates in this play was not personal but typical, and the caricature of the sage is free from malice. Other comedies contain jesting allusions to the philosopher, Av. 1555, Ran. 1491. In the Symposium of Plato Socrates and Aristophanes appear as friendly interlocutors at the banquet in the house of Agatho, the tragic poet. See especially the conclusion of the Dialogue.

Ἀρίστων, -ωνος: Aristo, an Athenian, the father of Adimantus and Plato, 34 A. See Πλάτων.

ἔρχειν: to be first, to rule, τινός, 28 E; to begin (for others to follow). Mid. ἀρχεσθαι, to begin (for oneself to continue), 31 D. ἀρχὴν ἄρχειν, 'to come to hold an office,' 32 B. Idiomatic phrase, ἐκ παιδὸς ἀρξάμενον (τοῦτο), 'from earliest childhood,' 31 D. Cp. ἐκ παίδων συμκρίων ἀρξάμενοι διδάσκουσι Prot. 325 C.

ἀτεχνῶς (ἀτεχνος, τέχνη): simply, wholly, quite, exactly, 17 D, 18 C. Often in Plato to excuse or soften a figurative expression, especially in conjunction with ὥσπερ or τις (Cicero, quasi quidam). ἀτεχνῶς ὥσπερ σκιαμαχεῖν ἀπολογούμενον 18 D. ἀτεχνῶς . . . ὕβρει τινί, 'in a sort of downright wantonness,' 26 E, cp. 30 E. ἀτεχνῶς ('literally') ἀπολογούμενος κατηγοροῖν ἂν ἐμαντοῦ 35 D: an oxymoron.

βουλευεῖν: to advise. Mid. βουλευεσθαι, to deliberate, take counsel, 32 C, Crit. 46 A, 52 E. At Athens, βουλευεῖν, 'to be a member of the βουλή.' See βουλή. βουλευεῖν = βουλευτῆς γενέσθαι 32 B.

βουλευτής: councilor, senator, a member of the Athenian βουλή, 25 A.

46 A. ἡ βουλή, the Athenian "Senate" or "Council of the Five Hundred," ἡ βουλή οἱ πεντακόσιοι. Five hundred βουλευταὶ were chosen annually by lot, from citizens over thirty years of age, fifty from each of the ten tribes (φυλαί). Each section of fifty exercised executive functions during one tenth of the year, the order in which the tribes should succeed each other being determined by lot. The presiding committee of fifty for the time being were termed πρυτάνεις, prytanes, the tribe was said πρυτανεύειν (32 B), and the period of thirty-five or thirty-six days of its presidency was called a prytany, πρυτανεία. One duty of the Senate was to present measures for consideration to the Popular Assembly (ἐκκλησία), over which the prytanes presided. Each day the prytanes chose by lot from their number an ἐπιστάτης or chairman, and it was he who put questions to the vote (ἐπιψηφίζειν) in the Assembly. Socrates happened to be ἐπιστάτης on the day when the generals concerned in the Battle of the Arginussae Islands were to be tried by the Assembly. The law required each man to be tried separately; hence, when a motion was made to dispose of the generals collectively (by a single ballot), Socrates refused to put the question to vote, Apol. 32 B. The circumstance is recorded also by Xenophon: βουλευσας γὰρ ποτε καὶ τὸν βουλευτικὸν ὄρκον δμύσας, ἐν ᾗ ἦν κατὰ τοὺς νόμους βουλευεῖν, ἐπιστάτης ἐν τῷ δήμῳ γενόμενος, ἐπιθυμήσαντος τοῦ δήμου παρὰ τοὺς νόμους μὴ ψήφῃ τοὺς ἀμφὶ Θράσυλλον καὶ Ἑρασινίδην ἀποκτείνει πάντας, οὐκ ἠθέλησεν ἐπιψηφίσαι, ὀργιζομένου τοῦ δήμου, πολλῶν δὲ καὶ δυνατῶν ἀπειλούντων, ἀλλὰ περὶ πλείονος ἐποιήσατο εὐδοκεῖν ἢ χαρίσασθαι τῷ δήμῳ παρὰ τὸ δίκαιον καὶ φυλάξασθαι τοὺς ἀπειλούντας. Mem. I. I. 18. See ναυμαχία.

γίγνεσθαι: to come into being, be born Crit. 50 D, E, 'arise,' Apol. 23 A; to become, 'be made,' 23 D, ἐπειδὴ δὲ ὀλιγαρχία ἐγένετο (sc. ἡ πόλις), 'after it had come to be an oligarchy,' 32 C. μεθ' ὑμῶν γενέσθαι, 'to take sides with you,' 32 C. οἱ μοι θεῶν τι καὶ δαιμόνιον γίγνεται ('comes') . . . φωνή τις γιγνομένη, ἣ ὅταν γένηται κτλ. 31 D. τὸ γεγονός τοῦτο, 'this event,' 36 A. τὸν γεγονότα ἀριθμὸν 'the number that has resulted,' 36 A. In periphrases γίγνεσθαι is regularly employed as a passive to mid. ποιεῖσθαι; as λόγους ποιεῖσθαι, 'to talk,' passive λόγοι γίγνονται. See ποιεῖν. κατὰ δηλοὶ γίγνονται, 'are exposed,' 23 D. αἱ γενόμεναι δίκαι, 'the judgments that are pronounced' (αἱ δὲ γένωνται), Crit. 50 B. ὑπὸ ἰδιωτῶν ἄκυροὶ γίγνονται ('are rendered invalid,' 'set at naught') 50 B.

γινώσκειν: to see with the mind, form judgments, recognise, 19 D. ἔγνων, 'I came to see,' 'perceived,' 22 B. οὗτος . . . σοφώτατός ἐστιν, ὅστις . . . ἔγνωκεν ('has come to see,' 'knows') οἱ οὐδενὸς ἀξίως ἐστι . . . πρὸς σοφίαν 23 B. γινώσκειν sometimes governs the genitive, following the analogy of αἰσθάνεσθαι, to perceive. γινώσεται . . . ἐμοῦ χαριεντιζομένου

κτλ. 27 A. See the synonyms, εἰδέναι, ἐπίστασθαι.

Γοργίας: Gorgias, of Leontini in Sicily, one of the most distinguished of the Sophists, 19 E. He lived to be more than a hundred years of age, surviving Socrates, whose death occurred 399 B.C. Gorgias made the art of "rhetoric" to include his whole doctrine, called himself ῥήτωρ, and achieved great fame as an orator. His mode of expression caused a profound sensation at Athens, whither he came 427 B.C. as an ambassador from his native city, and gave a strong impulse to the study of eloquence as an art, besides attracting many pupils and winning for him large sums of money in fees for instruction. Xenophon's friend, Proxenus the Boeotian, had put himself under the instruction of Gorgias, Anab. 2. 6. 16. The curiously ornate and artificial style of Gorgias is illustrated by the extant specimens of his oratory, an Encomium of Helen and a Defense of Palamedes. Plato's Gorgias deals in a caustic way with the subject of "rhetoric" (ἡ ῥητορική τέχνη) taken in a very wide sense.

γραφή: a writing. In Attic law, a public action, criminal prosecution, an ἀγὼν δημόσιος as distinguished from an ἀγὼν ἰδιος or δίκη. Thus Euthyphr. 2 A-Socrates says of the indictment for impiety that has been filed against him, οὗτοι δ' ἡ Ἀθηναῖοι γε δίκην αὐτὴν καλοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ γραφὴν. γραφὴν γράψασθαι, to file an indictment, Apol. 19 B, 26 B, 27 E. Here the mid. voice means 'to get written,' 'have written' for oneself, thro' the γραμματεὺς or official scribe. Cp. 31 D. The term ἀντιγραφῇ, properly the writing put in by the defendant, is used of the writing filed by the accuser 27 C. Similarly, ἀνωμοσία comes to denote the bill and affidavit of either party. Cp. 19 B, 24 B. In public causes, if the accuser failed to receive at least one fifth of the votes of the judges, he had to pay a fine of one thousand drachmae, and forfeited the right of ever bringing a similar action again. See 36 B. For further details of procedure, see δίκη, δικαστής.

δαιμόνιος 3: pertaining to a daemon (δαίμων) or daemones; δαιμόνια πράγματα 27 C. When applied to persons, δαιμόνιος properly means 'under the influence of a supernatural power,' in good or bad sense, and is apt as a form of address to convey a mild reproach, as ὦ δαιμόνιε ('thou strange being') Σώκρατες Crit. 44 B. Cp. the words of Andromache to Hector: δαιμόνιε, φθίσει σε τὸ σὸν μένος, Z 407. Cp. the similar ὦ θαυμάσιε Crit. 48 B, Apol. 26 D. In the Symposium Alcibiades points to Socrates as τούτῳ τῷ δαιμονίῳ ὡς ἀληθῶς καὶ θαυμαστῷ 219 C. As substantive, δαιμόνιον, a divine being, a divinity; thus, in the plural, in the indictment of Socrates, Apol. 24 B, 26 B. In 27 C. δαιμόνια is at first purely adjectival with πράγματα, then approaches a substantive meaning in allusion to the terms of the indictment. τὸ δαιμόνιον, in especial sense, 'the divine sign' of Socrates, frequently mentioned by both Xenophon and Plato, 40 A. In Plato more usual are the fuller expressions τὸ δαιμόνιον σημεῖον, τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ σημεῖον 40 B, τὸ εἰωθὸς σημεῖον 40 C. In 31 D the sign is described as 'a sort of voice,' which had been wont to come to Socrates ever since he could remember, never to impel him but always to deter him from something he was going to do: ἔμοι δὲ τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ἐκ παιδὸς ἀρξάμενον, φωνή τις γιγνομένη, ἥ θαν γένηται, αἰὲ ἀποτρέπει με τοῦτο δ' ἂν μέλλω πράττειν, προτρέπει δὲ οὐποτε. Thus it had opposed his engaging in public life (31 D), and from its silence on the occasion of his trial he infers that the event would be for the best (40 A-C). But while, according to Plato, the function of Socrates' δαιμόνιον was a negative one, Xenophon attributes to the sign an approving as well as a disapproving force, φάσκοντος αὐτοῦ τὸ δαιμόνιον ἑαυτῷ προσημαίνειν ἃ τε δεοὶ καὶ ἃ μὴ δεοὶ ποιεῖν Mem. 4. 8. 1. Neither Plato nor Xenophon explains the δαιμόνιον as a divine being, but only as an agency; while the accusers of Socrates wrested the sign into the sense of a being, and charged him accordingly with introducing 'new deities' into the state. See Xen. Mem. 1. 1. 2: διεθεθρύλητο ὡς φαῖη Σωκράτης τὸ δαιμόνιον αὐτῷ σημαίνειν. θθεν δὴ καὶ μάλιστα μοι δοκοῦσιν αὐτὸν αἰτιάσασθαι καινὰ δαιμόνια εἰσφέρειν. This representation is termed by Plato a caricature, δδὴ ἐν τῇ γραφῇ ἐπικωμῶδῶν Μέλητος ἐγράψατο 31 D. Since the mission of Socrates, who refused to apply the term 'knowledge' to anything but reasoned truth, was to enlarge the sphere of consciousness in his fellow-men, those instinctive promptings, which belong to the Unconscious and which he could not rationally explain, were naturally and very properly referred by him to divine agency. But where other men sought help externally in the traditional art of divination (μαντική), Socrates found a guide within himself. Cp. ἡ εἰωθυῖά μοι μαντική ἡ τοῦ δαιμονίου 40 A. Plato's restriction of the sign to a negative function probably means that when the divine influence coincided with the positive will and conscious resolve of the sage its voice would be superfluous and hardly noticeable. See Riddell, The Apology of Plato, Appendix A.

δαίμων, -ονος, ὁ, ἡ: a daemon, a divine being, properly a god viewed in his relation to man. The daemones were popularly believed to be either gods or the offspring of gods, 27 D. The divine sign (τὸ δαιμόνιον σημεῖον) of Socrates is called τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ σημεῖον 40 B. Cp. θεῖόν τι καὶ δαιμόνιον 31 D.

δέ: a postpositive particle of contrast, tho' its adversative force is often very slight. See μέν. There is no equivalent word in English for δέ ('on the other hand'); it must often be translated 'but,' 'and,' or 'while.' The fact that δέ is not the same as 'and' or 'but,' since it only offsets things, renders its occasional use "in apodosis" less paradoxical than the learner is at first prone to regard it. See Crit. 51 A, ἐάν σε ἐπιχειρῶμεν ἡμεῖς ἀπολλύναι . . . καὶ σὺ δὲ ἡμᾶς . . . ἐπιχειρήσεις ἀναπολλύναι. Here, in-

δεινός (δέος, δέδια) 3: fearful, dreadful, shocking, 28 D, 29 A. κατήγοροι . . . οὓς ἐγὼ μᾶλλον φοβοῦμαι ἢ τοὺς ἀμφὶ Ἄντων, καί περ ὄντας καὶ τοὺτους δεινοὺς ('formidable') 18 B, C. οὐδὲν δὲ δεινὸν ('there's no fear') μὴ ἐν ἐμοὶ στή 28 B. In Attic, colloquially weakened to denote a high degree of skill in anything, with accusative of specification or limiting infinitive. Thus, δεινὸς λέγειν, 'a clever speaker,' 17 B (three times, explained by ρήτωρ). The substantive δεινότης thus came to mean 'skill' or 'power,' or especially 'eloquence.'

Δελφοί, Δελφῶν, οἱ: Delphi, a town in Phocis, on the south slope of Mt. Parnassus, seat of the most celebrated of all the oracles of Apollo, 20 E, 21 A. The oracle of Delphi was consulted as to matters both of a public and a private nature. See the account of Xenophon's inquiry of Apollo regarding his intended expedition in Asia Minor, Anab. 3. 1. 5. The responses of the god were delivered thro' the medium of a priestess (προφῆτις), the Pythia or Pythoness, while seated upon a tripod within the temple over a chasm in the earth and subjected to the influence of an exhalation therefrom. The regular expression for an oracular response by the Pythia was ἀναφρεῖν, ἀνελεῖν (Apol. 21 A, Xen. Anab. 3. 1. 7). Her utterances were taken down by the attending priest (προφῆτης) and submitted to the inquirer, mostly in metrical form. The oracle reputed to have been given to Chaerephon has been preserved by Diogenes Laertius as one iambic trimeter, ἀνδρῶν ἀπάντων Σωκράτης σοφώτατος; by Suidas (s.v. σοφός) as an iambic distich, σοφός Σοφοκλῆς, σοφώτερος Εὐριπίδης, | ἀνδρῶν δὲ πάντων Σωκράτης σοφώτατος. Upon the walls of the temple of Delphi were inscribed brief maxims attributed to the Seven Sages of Greece. The most famous of these was γνῶθι σεαυτόν, know thyself, a sentiment precisely in accord with the spirit of the Socratic philosophy.

δέχεσθαι: to receive, accept. Followed by ἢ (with or without μάλλον), 'to prefer,' 22 E. Similarly, with a phrase denoting the price or terms of acceptance, Ὀρφεὶ συγγενέσθαι . . . ἐπὶ πόσῳ ἂν τις δέξαιτο ('on condition of how large a sum would one accept'), i.e. how much would one give to have a meeting with Orpheus? 41 A. Again, B. Thus, where our idiom regards the paying of the price, the Greek regards the receiving of that for which the price is paid.

Δήλιον: Delium, a temple and precinct of Apollo, in the territory of Tanagra in Boeotia, on the coast of the Euboean strait, 28 E. Properly the Delium, τὸ Δήλιον, Thuc. 4. 89. Hence, of the battle, ἐπὶ Δηλίῳ, not ἐν, there being no town here. In the eighth year of the Peloponnesian War, 424 B.C., the place was seized and fortified by a large force from Athens under Hippocrates. On their return march the Athenians were attacked and disastrously defeated by an army of Thebans and other Boeotians who had assembled at Tanagra. Socrates served as a hoplite at the Battle of Delium, and his courageous and even formidable demeanor in the retreat was celebrated by his friends Laches and Alcibiades, who were present. Cp. Lach. 181 B, Symp. 221.

Δῆλος, ἡ: Delos, one of the Cyclades Islands, sacred as the birth-place of Apollo and Artemis, Crit. 43 C. Delos was the center of an amphictyony of the Ionians, and a great festival was celebrated there every fifth year. There was also a lesser festival celebrated every year, when the Athenians sent to the island the sacred vessel mentioned by Plato in connection with the death of Socrates. The Delian galley was believed to be the same as that wherein Theseus had once conveyed the seven youths and seven maidens to Crete to be offered up to the Minotaur, when by the aid of Ariadne he threaded the mazes of the labyrinth, slew the monster, and brought back the victims safe and sound. During its absence on the holy mission (θεωρία) to Delos no public execution could take place at Athens. It thus happened that the execution of Socrates came to be deferred during the whole time occupied by the voyage of the sacred vessel to and from Delos. ἔτυχε γὰρ τῇ προτεραίᾳ τῆς δίκης (i.e. on the day before the trial of Socrates) ἡ πρόμνα ἐστεμμένη τοῦ πλοίου δ εἰς Δῆλον Ἀθηναῖοι πέμπουσιν . . . τοῦτ' ἐστὶ τὸ πλοῖον, ὥς φασιν Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐν ᾧ Θησεύς ποτε els Κρήτην τοὺς δις ἐπὶ ἐκείνους ᾤχετο ἄγων καὶ ἔσωσέ τε καὶ αὐτοὺς ἐσώθη. τῷ οὖν Ἀπόλλωνι εὖξαντο, ὡς λέγεται, τότε, εἰ σωθεῖεν, ἐκάστου ἔρους θεωρίαν ἀπάξειν εἰς Δῆλον· ἦν δὴ δεῖ καὶ νῦν ἔτι ἐξ ἐκείνου κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν τῷ θεῷ πέμπουσιν. ἐπειδὴν οὖν ἀρξονται τῆς θεωρίας, νόμος ἐστὶν αὐτοῖς ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ τούτῳ καθαρεύειν τὴν πόλιν καὶ δημοσίᾳ μηδὲνα ἀποκτινύναι, πρὶν ἂν εἰς Δῆλόν τε ἀφίκηται τὸ πλοῖον καὶ πάλιν δεῦρο . . . διὰ ταῦτα καὶ πολλὸς χρόνος ἐγένετο τῷ Σωκράτει ἐν τῷ δεσμωτηρίῳ ὁ μεταξὺ τῆς δίκης τε καὶ θανάτου Phaed. 58.

Δημόδοκος: Demodocus, an Athenian, the father of Paralus and Theages, 33 E.

διαφεύγειν: to flee through or between, escape by contrivance, elude, 29 C. Cp. 39 A, ἀποφεύγεται, 'get off'; ἐκφύγοι, ἐκφυγεῖν, 'come out alive'; while διαφεύγειν implies effort and contrivance (cp. μηχαναί in the same sentence). μή . . . τουτὶ . . . κακία τι . . . τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ διαπεφευγένοι ἡμῖς δοκῇ ('may seem thro' some cowardice on our part to have baffled us completely') Crit. 45 E. Cp. τοῦτο αἴτιον τοῦ διαφεύγειν τοὺς . . . ἰατροὺς τὰ πολλὰ νοσήματα ('why most ailments baffle the skill of the Greek physicians') Charm. 156 E. Here again there is a virtual personification of the subject, νοσήματα.

δίκαιος 3: righteous, just, 18 A. τὸ δίκαιον, 'the right,' 'right,' 32 A, C. τὰ δίκαια, 'the matters of right' (pertaining to the case), 'justice,' 35 C. δίκαια πεπονθώς, 'fairly treated,' 'recompensed,' 41 E. With an infinitive the personal construction of δίκαιος is usually preferred to the impersonal in Attic. δίκαιός εἰμι ἀπολογησασθαι, 'it is fair for me to make a defense,' 18 A, Crit. 45 A. See HA. 944 A, G. 1527, B. 634.

δικάζειν: to be a δικαστής or juror, to judge, 35 C, 41 A; 'to decide a case at law,' 'render judgments,' δίκας δικάζειν, Crit. 50 C, 51 E, 53 C. Passive 50 B. Mid. δικάζεσθαι, 'to be at law,' 'go to law'; said of the parties to a suit.

δικαστήριον: a court of justice, dicastery; indicating both the aggregate judges (δικασταί) who sat in court and the place where they held their sittings, 17 D, 29 A. Of the latter there were at one time ten in Athens, most of them probably situated near the ἄγορά. See δικαστής.

δικαστής: a judge, juror, dicast, 18 A, 35 C, 40 A, 41 A, C. The largest body of judges or jurors at Athens was called the ἡλιαία, its members were ἡλιασταί. Socrates was tried before a Heliastic court. Six thousand dicasts (heliasts) were chosen by lot every year from those who had made application for the office. To be eligible the juror must be a free citizen, in the enjoyment of his full franchise, and not less than thirty years of age. The 6000 were divided into sections of 500 each, probably ten, with 1000 reserves. Each section was designated by a letter of the alphabet, and a small tablet was delivered to each dicast, inscribed with his name, his father's name, that of his Deme, and the letter of his section. Similarly, upon entering a particular court to which he was appointed, the dicast received a staff (βακτηρία or ράβδος), and upon leaving he was paid his fee of three obols (τριώβολον). Before proceeding to the exercise of his functions the dicast was obliged to swear the official oath (Apol. 35 C). It ran about as follows: ψηφιοῦμαι κατὰ τοὺς νόμους καὶ τὰ ψηφίσματα τοῦ δήμου τοῦ Ἀθηναίων καὶ τῆς βουλῆς τῆς πεντακοσίων, περὶ δ' ὧν ἂν νόμοι μὴ ᾖσι, γινώμῃ τῇ δικαιοτάτῃ καὶ οὔτε χάριτος ἔνεκ' οὐτ' ἔχθρας. καὶ ψηφιοῦμαι περὶ αὐτῶν ('precisely') ὧν ἂν ἡ δίκῃς ἦ καὶ ἀκροάσομαι τῶν τε κατηγορούντων καὶ τῶν ἀπολογουμένων ὁμοίως ἀμφοῖν. δμῶνι νῆ τὸν Δία, νῆ τὸν Ἀπόλλω, νῆ τὴν Δήμητρα, καὶ εἴη μὲν μοι εὐορκούντι πολλὰ καὶ ἀγαθὰ, ἐπιωορκούντι δ' ἐξώλεια αὐτῶν τε καὶ γένει. The oath being taken, the courts in which they were to sit were assigned by lot to the several sections every time that it was necessary to impanel a number of dicasts. According to the nature and importance of the case to be tried one or more sections of 500, or fractions of sections, made up the number of any particular dicastery. The voting was by ballot, with shells, either real or artificial. There were two urns, or boxes, one for condemnation, the other for acquittal; and the juror dropped his ballot (ψῆφος) into the one or the other of them, in some way so as to secure secrecy of voting. A tie vote was accounted as acquittal. At the trial of Socrates the dicastery consisted apparently of 500. Had only 30 votes changed sides, he would have been acquitted (Apol. 36 A).

That is to say, 250 votes being needed for acquittal, there must have been 280 for guilty and 220 for not guilty on the first ballot. In an Athenian dicastery unwelcome remarks were apt to be received by the judges with many noisy demonstrations of disapproval, pounding with their staves and vociferation, θόρυβος καὶ βοή, θορυβεῖν. Hence numerous passages in the Attic Orators where such interruptions are deprecated by the speaker. Plato has availed himself of this habit to heighten the lifelike effect of many scenes in the Apology. Cp. 17 D, 20 E, 21 A, 30 C.

Δίκη: right, justice; in law, a suit, case, trial, judgment, Crit. 45 E, 50 B; penalty, Apol. 39 B. The suits which came before the Athenian jurors were private or public, according as the offense charged was against an individual or against the state. A private suit was termed δίκη ἰδία or simply δίκη; a public suit was δίκη δημοσία or, usually, γραφή. See γραφή. Proceedings were begun by a summons to the defendant to appear before the proper magistrate and answer the charges preferred against him. Thus Socrates, at the beginning of the Euthyphro 2 A, is encountered at the porch of the ἀρχὼν βασιλεὺς, where he has come to answer to the charge of impiety entered by Meletus. There a preliminary examination was held, beginning with the affidavit of the plaintiff or accuser (προωμωσία), answered by that of the defendant (ἀντιωμωσία, ἀντιγραφή). But the latter terms were sometimes applied also to the writing of the accuser (Apol. 19 B, 27 C).

These documents were then sealed and finally produced and opened at the trial. The president of the court was the magistrate to whose province the subject of the charge belonged, as for example at the trial of Socrates the King Archon, the second of the nine archons. The parties pleaded their own cases before the judges, the speech of the accuser being followed by that of the defendant. The time allowed to each speaker was measured by the flow of water from the κλεψύδρα or water clock. Either party during the course of his speech had the right to put questions to the other party (ἐρώτησις), and these questions the person interrogated was obliged by law to answer. See Lysias 12. 25. Plato avails himself of this custom in the Apology, 24 C-27 E, with telling effect, since he is thus enabled to throw the defense into the form of dialectic, the regular Socratic method of refutation. If one of the parties to a suit failed to appear, the case was called δίκη ἐρήμη (ἐρήμην κατηγοροῦντες, sc. δίκην, 18 C) and went against the absent party by default. For the method of voting by the jury, see δικαστής. For expressions denoting conviction, acquittal, etc., see αἰρεῖν, ὀφλισκάνειν, φεύγειν. For some offenses the penalty was fixed by law, and the verdict of guilty carried with it the sentence; for others the penalty had to be determined at the trial, after an unfavorable verdict had been announced. Trials of the latter sort were called ἀγῶνες τιμητοί ('to be assessed'); the former were ἀγῶνες ἀτίμητοι. See τιμῶν. In an ἀγῶν τιμητός (such was the γραφὴ ἀσεβείας preferred against Socrates) the accuser named a penalty (τίμημα, valuation) which he called upon the court to inflict as suited to the gravity of the offense. Cp. τιμᾶται μοι ὁ ἀνὴρ θανάτου 36 B. The convicted party then named a counter-penalty (ἀντιτίμημα) of milder character, and without discussion or modification of the two penalties proposed the court decided by a majority vote which one of them should be inflicted.

δοκεῖν: to seem, to the mind; verb of opinion, imagination, belief. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ὑμᾶς ποιεῖ εὐδαίμονας δοκεῖν εἶναι, ἐγὼ δὲ εἶναι, 36 D. ἔδοξέ μοι οὗτος . . . δοκεῖν μὲν εἶναι σοφός . . . εἶναι δ' οὐ, 'I came to believe that he seemed to be wise, but was not,' 21 C. καὶ μοι ταῦτά ταῦτα ἔδοξε, 'I came to exactly the same opinion as before,' 21 D. ὡς ἐν τῷ ὑστέρω χρόνῳ πᾶσιν ὑμῖν ἔδοξεν, 'as subsequently you all came to think,' 32 B. ὡς ἂν δόξαιμι 34 C. Here we say 'as it might seem.' Cp. ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκῶ (videor mihi) 36 A. But, except usually with ὡς or ὥσπερ, or when it means 'to seem best,' the verb must not be used impersonally, i.e. without a substantive or a pronoun as its subject. Sometimes δοκῶ means I think, but no example of this usage is afforded by the Apology or Crito. ὀλίγοις τισὶ ταῦτα καὶ δοκεῖ καὶ δόξει, 'tis but few either hold or will hold these views,' Crit. 49 D. οἷς οὕτω δέδοκται, 'they who have this fixed resolve,' ib. σοὶ δ' ἐπὶ ἄλλῃ δέδοκται, 'if your mind is made up some other way, 49 E. δεδογμένον γέ ἐστι, 'it is at any rate a settled opinion' (people have made up their minds) Apol. 35 A. Idiomatic phrase, δοκεῖν μοι, 'as I believe,' Crit. 43 B. Absolute Infinitive. See HA. 956, G. 1534, B. 642, 1, Gl. 569. The nearest synonym of δοκεῖν is οἶσθαι. Cp. δοκεῖν ἑαυτῷ εἶναι σοφός, then οἶοιτο εἶναι σοφός Apol. 21 C. But δοκεῖν by its construction is seen to indicate that the thought comes to the mind thro' an impulse from without. Cp. also ἡγεῖσθαι (ἡγήσονται, after δόξης, Crit. 44 C), and νομίζειν. See δόξα.

δόξα (δοκεῖν): an opinion, view, belief, ἡ τῶν πολλῶν δόξα Crit. 44 C, 46 C, D; also the opinion others hold of one, fame, name, reputation, Apol. 34 E, 35 B, Crit. 53 B. The relation of δόξα to δοκεῖν is clearly brought to view in the passages above cited. Crit. 44 B-D affords illustration of both the subjective and the objective meaning of the substantive: πολλοῖς δόξω . . . ἀμελήσαι. καίτοι τις ἀναισχίῳ ἐν ταύτης δόξῃ ('reputation') ἢ δοκεῖν χρήματα περὶ πλείονος ποιεῖσθαι ἢ φίλους; . . . ἀλλὰ τί ἡμῶν . . . οὗτω τῆς τῶν πολλῶν δόξης ('opinion') μέλει;

εἰδέναι (εἶδ-, ἰδεῖν): to know; οἶδα, ἥδη 22 D, εἰσομαι. ὁ τι ὑμεῖς πεκόνθατε, οὐκ οἶδα 17 A. ἃ μὴ οἶδα, οὐδὲ οἶμαι εἰδέναι, 21 D. ἄνθρωπος ὅστις . . . τοῦτο οἶδεν, τοὺς νόμους, 24 E. When a person is the object of εἰδέναι the verb does not mean merely to know who he is (γιννώσκειν), but significantly to know him, have a knowledge of him (alive or dead), know 'all about him' as we say. Χαιρεφῶντα γὰρ ἴσ τε που (tho' Chaerephon was then no longer living) 20 E. Cp. καὶ ἴσ τε δὴ οἶος ἦν Χαιρεφῶν 21 A. πολλοῖς δόξω, οἱ ἐμὲ καὶ σὲ μὴ σαφῶς ἴσασι, . . . ἀμελήσαι, Crit. 44 B. Since εἰδέναι properly applies to a knowledge of facts (first-hand knowledge) it became naturally the word for Socrates to employ in his philosophical way to denote knowledge of (reasoned) truth. See σοφία, ἐπιστήμη, also ἐλεγχος. To those persons who have no claim to be called σοφοί in the Socratic sense, τὸ εἰδέναι τι is denied. οὗτος μὲν οἶεται τι εἰδέναι οὐκ εἰδῶς 21 D. ἀπακτας τοὺς τι δοκοῦντας εἰδέναι 21 E. πολλὴν ἀφθονίαν οἰομένων μὲν εἰδέναι τι ἀνθρώπων, εἰδῶτων δὲ ὀλίγα ἢ οὐδέν, 23 C. προσποιούμενοι μὲν εἰδέναι τι, εἰδότες δὲ οὐδέν, 23 D. The works of poets and other inspired persons do not proceed from (conscious, reasoned) knowledge. καὶ γὰρ οὗτοι λέγουσι μὲν πολλὰ καὶ καλὰ, ἴσασι δὲ οὐδέν ὧν λέγουσι, 21 C. The skill of artisans (handicraftsmen, χειροτέχναι) seemed to Socrates a little nearer to wisdom than that of statesmen and artists, because they really knew how they made things. Yet even their knowledge was not τὸ εἰδέναι τι, for the reason given 22 D. See ἐπίστασθαι.

εἰσάγειν: to lead into. In law, 'to bring into court,' 'prosecute.' ἐμὲ εἰσάγεις εἰς τουτουοῖ καὶ κατηγορεῖς 24 D. περὶ ὧν ἐμὲ εἰσάγεις 25 C, 25 D, assembly of the citizens of Athens, the ecclesia, 25 A. In it the affairs of the commonwealth were discussed and voted upon. In certain cases it exercised judicial functions, especially where serious offenses were concerned which required immediate condemnation and were not provided for specifically by law. Such was the trial of the generals alluded to Apol. 32 B.

See ναυμαχία. Regular meetings of the ecclesia were held four times in each prytany (see βουλή), the prytanes presided over them, and any measure presented for discussion must first have been prepared and considered by the senate. Extraordinary meetings were also called when occasion required.
The usual place of assembling was the Pnyx, a slope connected with Mt.
Lycabettus, to the west of the Areopa-
gus. Cp. ἀναβαίνων eis τὸ πλῆθος τὸ ὑμέτερον 31 C. The right of attending and voting was enjoyed by all legitimate male citizens who were of the proper age, probably twenty years.
Thus Apol. 25 A οἱ ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, οἱ ἐκκλησιασταί, is meant merely to designate typically a more numerous class of persons than was implied in οἱ βουλευταί previously suggested. In the allusion 32 B ὑμεῖς applies to the judges of Socrates as representatives of the whole body of Athenians who met in the Pnyx.

Ἑκτωρ, -ορος: Hector, son of king Priam and Hecuba, and foremost champion of the Trojans in the Trojan War, 28 C. See Πάτροκλος.

ἐλέγχειν: to prove by questioning, test, confute, 18 D, 21 C, 39 D. Cp.
ἐρήσομαι αὐτὸν καὶ ἐξετάσω καὶ ἐλέγξω 29 E. See ἔλεγχος. A strengthened form of the verb is the compound ἐξελέγχειν, 17 B, 23 A.

ἔλεγχος: a proof by questioning, test. Apol. 39 C ἐλέγchon διδόναι τοῦ βλου, viz. by submitting to cross-questioning as the touchstone of knowledge.
ἐλέγχειν and ἔλεγχος are so strictly characteristic of the method of the Platonic Socrates that elenchus has been adopted as an English word by some writers. Speaking of the way in which Plato tests the efficacy of any expository process, Grote says, Plato
vol. 1, c. 6: "the standard which he applies is, that the learner shall be rendered able both to apply to others, and himself to endure from others,
a Socratic Elenchus or cross-examination as to the logical difficulties involved in all the steps and helps to learning. Unless he can put to others and follow up the detective questions—unless he can also answer them, when put to himself, pertinently and consistently, so as to avoid being brought to confusion or contradiction—Plato

will not allow that he has attained true knowledge."

ἐνδεικνύναι: to point out, show, in or in regard to any matter. Mid. ἐνδεικνυσθαι, to show, demonstrate, prove one's contention, 23 B, 29 D. τότε . . . αὐτὸς ἐνέδειξάμην ὅτι ἐμοὶ θανάτου μὲν μέλει . . . οὐδ' ὅτι οὖν 32 D. As Attic law term, act. ἐνδεικνύναι, 'to report' one before the magistrate, 'inform against,' in cases of summary jurisdiction, by the process termed ἐνδείξις, 32 B. In the passage cited ἐνδεικνύναι με καὶ ἀπάγειν is merely a forcible expression for summary procedure in general, not implying that both endeixis and apagoge would be technically applicable to the case in hand. See ἀπάγειν.

ἐνδεκα: eleven. οἱ ἐνδεκα, the Eleven, a board of magistrates at Athens, chosen annually, one from each of the ten tribes, with a clerk (γραμματεὺς) who formed one of their number, Apol. 37 C. The Eleven had the care and management of the public prisons and carried into effect the death sentences pronounced by the courts of law and the public assemblies.

ἐξετάζειν: to inquire into, scrutinize, examine thoroughly, 23 C, 28 E. The word is characteristic of the Socratic method, cp. ἐρήσομαι αὐτὸν καὶ ἐξετάσω καὶ ἐλέγξω 29 E. χαίρουσιν ἐξεταζομένοις τοῖς ολομένοις μὲν εἶναι σοφοῖς, οὗσι δ' οὐ, 33 C. The famous saying ὁ ἀνεξέταστος βίος οὐ βιωτὸς ἀνθρώπῳ 38 A means that life is a failure when a man fails to apply to his mind that scrutiny which alone enables him to know himself and to ἐπαίειν: to understand as an expert, to be specially versed in something, περὶ τινος, 19 C. Cp. τῷ ἐπιστάτῃ καὶ ἐπαύοντι Crit. 47 B. ὁ ἐπαύων . . . ὁ εἰς 48 A. The simple verb αἰεῖν is poetic and means to perceive, especially to hear. ἐπαίειν is of frequent occurrence in Plato, the imperfect stem only.

Ἐπιγένης, -ους: Epigenes, a follower of Socrates, son of Antiphon of Cephisia, 33 E. Epigenes appears in the Memorabilia of Xenophon 3. 12. 1; and in the Phaedo of Plato 59 B he is named among those present at the death of Socrates in the prison.

ἐπικεῖς, -εῖς (elkós): fair, reasonable. Neut. plur., ἐπικεῖ λέγειν, 34 D. As applied to persons ἐπικεῖς is a refined synonym of ἀγαθός, ἐπιεικεία ("sweet reasonableness") a characteristic of one who deserves the appellation καλὸς ἀγαθός. The ἐπικεῖς ἀνὴρ can see both sides of a question and has sufficient imagination to put himself when need be in another man's place. The ἐπικεῖστατοι are opposed to the πολλοὶ Crit. 44 C, τοὺς ἐπικεῖς ἀνδρας τοὺς μοχθηροὺς Arist. Poet. 13. ἡγησάμενος ἐμάντῳ τῷ ὄντι ἐπικεῖστερον εἶναι ἢ ὥστε . . . σφῆσεσθαι ('in truth too good a man to survive') Apol. 36 B. ἐπικεῖστεροι ἄνδρες πρὸς τὸ φρονίμως ἔχειν, 'better men as to wisdom,' 22 A. The adv. ἐπικεῖως betrays the familiar use of the word.

ἐπικεῖως: fairly, tolerably. ἐπικεῖως πάλοι, 'pretty long,' Crit. 43 A.

20 C, E, 22 D; with inf., to know how to do something. Of the class of artists (χειροτέχναι), to whom Socrates concedes a certain sort of wisdom, the verb ἐπιστάσθαι is used with strict appropriateness, 22 D. See εἰδέναι and ἐπιστήμη.

ἐπιστήμη: knowledge, properly of the sort answering to ἐπιστάσθαι as denoting skill, 19 C. Cp. the adj. ἐπιστήμων 20 B. But Plato uses ἐπιστήμη also to denote 'knowledge' in a sense answering to εἰδέναι, just as σοφία answers to εἰδέναι in the sense of 'wisdom.' In the Theaetetus, 201, the suggestion that ἐπιστήμη is δόξα ἀληθὴς μετὰ λόγου, "true opinion coupled with rational explanation," is set aside as not affording an adequate definition.

ἐπεύχαι: to ask, inquire; éphesomai. Apol. 21 A, 29 E, Crit. 50 A. Cp. the compound ἀπεύχεται 20 A. The want of an imperfect stem is supplied by ἐρωτᾶν.

ἐρωτᾶν: to ask questions, interrogate, 23 D, 24 D, 33 B. The verb is regular, but the fut. and aor. act. occur less frequently than ἐρήσομαι, ἠρόμην.

Εὐήνης: Euēnus, a sophist, a native of the isle of Paros, 20 B. Evenus was both rhetor and poet. Plato mentions him also Phaed. 60 D, Phaedr. 267 A; there, as in the Apology, in a tone of irony and disparagement.

Z

Ζεύς (διεφες), Διός: Zeus, the supreme god in the Greek religion; Roman Diespiter, Iupiter. The name occurs in the Apology and the Crito only in the phrases μὰ (τὸν) Δία (negative) Apol. 17 B, 26 D, E, Crit. 43 B; νῆ Δία (affirmative), Apol. 35 D, 39 C, Crit. 50 C; πρὸς Διός, 'in Heaven's name,' Apol. 25 C, 26 E. Originally employed in the taking of an oath, μὰ Δία and νῆ Δία became colloquially weakened to mere formulas of asseveration. Thoughtful minds tended to avoid too frequent and familiar use of these phrases. See the note on νῆ τὸν κύνα 21 E.

H

ἡγεῖσθαι (ἄγειν): to be leader, lead the way, τινός; to hold an opinion (Lat. dūcere) 35 C, 36 B, Crit. 44 C, 47 E. τοὺς δαίμονας θεοὺς ἡγούμεθα ('deem them gods') Apol. 27 D. But θεοὺς ἡγεῖσθαι, 'to believe in gods,' ib. In this sense νομίζειν is usual, cp. 27 C. See the synonyms νομίζειν, δοκεῖν, οἶσθαι.

Ἡλῆτος (Ἡλῆς) 3: of Elis, 19 E. Elis was in the northwest angle of the Peloponnese. The most important place in the country was Olympia, in the valley of the Alphēus, the scene of the great national festival.

ἦν: ἦν δ' ἐγώ, said I, 20 A, B; ἦ δ' ὅς, said he, 20 B. These forms of ἦμι (poetic) occur in prose (often in Plato's dialogues) only in the phrases here quoted.

Ἡρᾶ: Hera, the goddess, consort of Zeus; Roman Iuno. εἰ γε νῆ τήν Ἡρᾶν λέγεις, 'well said, by Hera!' 24 E. The tone of the exclamation is strongly ironical.

Ἡρόδοτος: Hesiod, the epic and didactic poet, 41 A. The names of Homer and Hesiod are often coupled, as in the passage cited, as representatives of the old epos. Except, however, in the metrical form and the dialect employed, there is little or no resemblance between the Iliad and Odyssey and the poems of later date ascribed to Hesiod. Hesiod's Works and Days ('Ἔργα καὶ Ἡμέραι) is a sort of Old Farmer's Almanac in verse, the most ancient Greek example of a didactic poem. The name of Hesiod stands for a school of minstrelsy developed at the foot of Mt. Helicon in Boeotia. The poet himself is believed to have lived in the eighth century B.C., a native of the Boeotian town of Ascræ. Hence the line of Virgil, who took the Works and Days as model for his Georgics, Ascræcumque cano Romana per oppida carmen Georg. 2. 176.

ἡσυχία: quiet. ἡσυχίαν ἀγειν, 'to keep quiet,' 'mind one's business,' 36 B, 37 E, Crit. 48 D, 51 B. See πολυπραγμονεῖν.

Θ

Θεάγης, -ους: Theāges, an Athenian, son of Demodocus and brother of Paralus, 33 E. One of the Platonic dialogues bears his name. From the Republic, 496 B, we learn that Theages would have entered political life, but ill health detained him in the service of philosophy.

Θεόδοτος: Theodotus, an Athenian, son of Theozotides and brother of Nicostratus. He had been a follower of Socrates, but is mentioned as deceased at the time of the trial, 33 E.

Θεοζοτίδης: Theozotides, an Athenian, the father of Theodotus and Nicostratus, 33 E.

Θέτις, -ιδος: Thetis, a Nereid who became the wife of Peleus and the mother of Achilles, 28 C. See especially Catullus 64, Epithalamium of Peleus and Thetis. Thetis is an important figure in several of the most dramatic situations of the Iliad of Homer. She obtains for her son the promise from Zeus to turn the tide of war against the Greeks until Agamemnon shall be humbled, A 414, 495. Again, when Achilles is bent upon going forth to slay Hector, to avenge the death of his friend Patroclus, his mother, while not disapproving of her son's resolve, reminds him of the alternatives of his destiny, either to live long and ingloriously, or to meet an early death and achieve imperishable renown, Σ 95. Cp. I 410: μήτηρ γάρ τέ με φησι, θεὰ Θέτις ἀργυρόπεζα, | διχθαδίας κῆρας φέρεμεν θανάτοιο τέλοςδε. | εἰ μὲν κ' ἀθθι μένων Τρώων πόλιν ἀμφιμάχωμαι, | ὦλετο μὲν μοι νόστος, ἀτὰρ κλέος ἄφθιτον ἔσται. | εἰ δέ κεν οἴκαδ' ἰκωμὶ φίλην ἐς πατρίδα γαῖαν, | ὦλετο μὲν κλέος ἔσθλόν, ἐπὶ δὴρὸν δέ μοι αἰὼν | ἔσσεται, οὐδέ κ' ἐμ' ὦκα τέλος θανάτοιο κιχείη.

Θεσσαλία: Thessaly, a district of Northern Greece, Crit. 45 C, 53 D, E, 54 A. Thessaly is surrounded by well-defined mountain chains, Pindus on the west, Othrys on the south, Ossa and Pelion on the east, and the Cambunian mountains on the north. At the northeast angle stands Mt. Olympus, and between Olympus and Ossa the river Penēus carries out the gathered waters of this great basin thro' the romantic Vale of Tempe. Thessaly figures conspicuously in the legendary history of Hellas. The district of Phthiotis in the south was the native land of Achilles, and from it the Argonauts had set out on their adventurous voyage. The plains of Thessaly were wide and suited to horse-breeding. The soil was rich, and in historical times was possessed by a few wealthy families, such as the Aleuadae of Larissa and the Scopadae of Crannon, and tilled by a serf population. The Aleuadae displayed the utmost zeal in forwarding the plans of Xerxes when that monarch invaded Greece, Herod. 7. 6. Political development under these circumstances was backward, cp. Crit. 53 B. The name of the Thessalians became proverbial for faithlessness, del τὰ Θετταλῶν ἀπιστα, cp. Dem. 1. 22. A typical Thessalian, apparently, was Menon the general, whose character is sketched by Xenophon, Anab. 2. 6. 21.

Θηβαῖος (Θήβαι): of Thebes, a Theban, Crit. 45 B. Thebes, the capital city of Boeotia, lay halfway between the eastern and the western sea, about thirty-five miles northwest of Athens.

θνήσκειν: to be dying, to die; τεθνάναι to be dead, 30 C, 38 E, 40 C, E, 41 A, Crit. 43 C, τέθνηκεν Apol. 41 B. In prose the simple verb occurs only in the imperfect and the perfect stem, the prosaic future and aorist being always ἀποθαροῦμαι, ἀπέθαρην. See ἀποθνήσκειν.

Θόλος, ἡ: a round building with dome-like roof. At Athens, ἡ Θόλος, the Rotunda, adjoining the βουλευτήριον or senate-house, in the ἀγορά. The Prytanes (see βουλῆ) took their common meals and offered their sacrifices in the Rotunda, and it was similarly used by the Thirty Tyrants, Apol. 32 C, D.

I

ἵνα: where; with clauses of finality, that, in order that. The subjunctive is the regular mode to denote finality of purpose, but a past tense of the indicative may be used with ἵνα, to show that the purpose is unattained or unattainable. See HA. 884, G. 1371, B. 590, N. 4, Gl. 642 C. Here there is usually assimilation of mode, to a past wish or unreal condition. el γὰρ ὥφελον οἱ τοὶ τ' εἶναι οἱ πολλοὶ τὰ μέγιστα κακὰ ἐργάζεσθαι, ἵνα οἱ τοὶ τ' ἦσαν καὶ ἀγαθὰ τὰ μέγιστα, Crit. 44 D. An elliptical idiomatic phrase is the interrogative ἵνα τί (in full, ἵνα τί γένηται) to what end? ἵνα τί ταῦτα λέγεις Apol. 26 C.

Ἱππίας: Hippias, of Elis, a sophist, 19 E. He was distinguished for the wide range of his accomplishments, being a poet, a musician, an expositor of the poets, able to teach astronomy, geometry, and arithmetic, and giving lectures on subjects moral and political. Xenophon Mem. 4. 4. 5 ff. reports a conversation between Hippias and Socrates, in which the sophist mocks the sage for talking eternally about the same things, averring that he himself always endeavors to say something new. Two of the Platonic dialogues bear his name, the Hippias Major and the Hippias Minor. He figures also in the Protagoras.

Ἰππώνικος: Hipponicus, the father of Callias, 20 A. See Καλλίας.

K

Καλλίας: Callias, the son of Hipponicus, an Athenian, 20 A. He came of an old and distinguished family, and his father, Hipponicus, was reputed to be the richest Greek of his day. The large fortune which Callias inherited he squandered by extravagant habits, and died poor. In the Protagoras of Plato we are introduced to the sophists Protagoras, Hippias of Elis, and Prodicus of Ceos in the house of Callias, where they are stopping as guests. The scene of Xenophon's Symposium is also laid at the house of Callias. He appears several times in political history.

καλός 3: beautiful, 'fine,' 19 E, ironically 37 D. The neuter often in moral sense, 'honorable,' 34 E; thus opposed to αἰσχρόν, ugly, 'base,' cp. 35 A. Lat. pulchrum and turpe. καλός κάγαθος, or καλός τε κάγαθος, 'fair and good,' 25 A. A highly complimentary phrase at Athens, to express the combination of all noble and admirable qualities in a man. See Xenophon's highly instructive and entertaining account of the Athenian Ischomachus who bore this title, Oec. 6. 12 ff. The phrase is applicable to things as well as persons, 21 D. Of animals, 20 B. See ἐπικεικός.

κατελθεῖν: to come down. In a political sense, of an exile, 'to return,' 21 A. The imperfect is κατιέναι. The preposition has the same force in κατάγειν, 'to restore' an exile to his home.

Κέβης, Κέβητος: Cebes, a Theban, a friend and companion of Socrates, Crit. 45 B. Cebes and Simias were young men devoted to philosophy who at Thebes had come under the influence of Philolāus, an eminent Pythagorean. A cardinal doctrine of the Pythagorean sect was the metempsychosis or transmigration of souls; and their leaning to this belief rendered Cebes and Simias appropriate interlocutors with Socrates in the Phaedo of Plato, where the subject of the conversation is the immortality of the soul.

Κεός (Kéws): of Ceos, the nearest of the Cyclades Islands to Attica, between the promontory of Sunium and the isle of Cythus, 19 E. Prodicus the sophist and Simonides the poet were natives of Iūlis in Ceos. The name of Cean was proverbial for temperance and integrity, cp. Plato Prot. 341 E.

Κηφισίαις, -έως: a native of Cephisia, an Attic deme of the tribe Erechtheis, northeast of Athens, 33 E.

κινδυνεύειν (κινδύνος): to run risks, to be in danger, 25 E, 28 B, D, E, Crit. 45 A. But the verb also has a special use in Plato, to soften confident abruptness of speech, conveying a plain fact with Attic reserve, as it were not to seem too sure about it. τῷ θντι κινδυνεύω ταύτην εἶναι σοφός, 'in truth I do stand some chance of being wise in this wisdom,' 20 D. κινδυνεύει ἡμῶν οὐδέτερος οὐδὲν καλὸν κάγαθόν εἶδέναι,

'tis likely that neither of us possesses any knowledge beautiful and good,' 21 D. τὸ δὲ κινδυνεῖαι τῷ ὄντι ὁ θεὸς σοφὸς εἶναι, 'the real probability, however, is that God is wise,' 23 A. κινδυνεῖς ἐν καιρῷ τινα οὐκ ἐγγίπαί με, 'you seem to have acted quite opportunely in not waking me,' Crit. 44 A.

Κλαζομένιος 3: of Clazomenae, an Ionian city of Asia Minor, on the Gulf of Smyrna, noted as the birthplace of the philosopher Anaxagoras, 26 D.

κορυβαττῶν (Κορύβας): to be possessed by Corybantic frenzy, Crit. 54 D. οἱ κορυβαττῶντες οὐκ ἔμφορες ὄντες ὀρχοῦνται Ion 534 A, cp. Symp. 215 E. The Corybantes were priests of Rhea Cybele, the Great Mother or Mountain Mother (μήτηρ ὄρεα), an Asiatic deity whose rites were attended with wild music and dancing. In the Ion 536 C, the rhapsode capable of listening to the verses of Homer alone, is compared to the frenzied worshippers of Cybele who had ears only for the music of their own deity: ὥσπερ οἱ κορυβαττῶντες ἐκείνου μόνου αἰσθάνονται τοῦ μέλους ὀξέως, ὃ ἂν ᾗ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐξ ὅτου ἂν κατέχωνται.

Κρήνη: the island of Crete, Crit. 52 E. Crete and Lacedaemon are often coupled, as in the passage cited, as conspicuous examples of the Dorian polity. The aristocratic institutions of the Dorian race were admired by Socrates and Plato for their stability, dignity, and apparent moral purpose, in contrast with the turbulence and laxity characteristic of the democratic states. See Λακεδαιμῶν.

Κριτόβουλος: Critobulus, son of Crito, a follower of Socrates, present at the trial, and one of those ready to be sureties for the payment of a fine, 33 D, 38 B. He was also present, with his father, at the death of Socrates, Phaed. 59 B. Critobulus is the interlocutor with Socrates in Xenophon's Oeconomicus and he appears also in the Memorabilia.

Κρίτων, -ωνος: Crito, an Athenian of the deme of Alopece, to which Socrates also belonged, and a devoted friend of the philosopher, 33 D, 38 B, Crit. passim. Crito was rich, and his wealth was ever at the service of his friend. He went bail for the appearance of Socrates before the dicastery, Phaed. 115 D; offered to be surety for a fine if the sentence of death were commuted, Apol. 38 B; and in the dialogue which bears his name is ready to bribe the jailer and make arrangements for the escape of Socrates from the prison. After the fatal draught of hemlock it is Crito who closes the eyes of his departed friend, Phaed. 118 A. Crito had two sons, Critobulus and another much younger. His principal occupation seems to have been the care of his estates. Xenophon Mem. 2. 9 reports a conversation between Crito and Socrates, in which the latter gives his friend some good advice about protecting himself against the syncophants or common informers, by keeping an honest man in his service to act as a sort of watch-dog in matters of law. Crito had a leaning toward philosophy, but in the dialogue which bears his name we note that he rises with difficulty to the moral heights whither he is led by Socrates.

Δ

Λακεδαίμων, -ονος, ἡ: Lacedaemon (or Sparta) in Laconia of the Peloponnese, Crit. 52 E. In the Odyssey, δ 1, the valley of Sparta is called 'hollow Lacedaemon' (κοίλην Λακεδαίμονα), from the character of the land, a deep depression between Mts. Taygetus and Parnon, intersected by the river Eurotas. Protected by its rampart of mountains, Sparta needed no walls, and was itself rather an agglutination of villages than a city. The government of Lacedaemon was a military oligarchy, the few Spartan citizens or 'peers' (ἄμωιοι), descendants of the Dorian invaders, holding in check the large conquered native population of Laconia and sometime of Messenia. The Laws of Lycurgus, the rigid and permanent system of the Spartan state, excited the admiration of Plato and other thoughtful Athenians who were repelled by the unstable and turbulent character of the democratic institutions under which they lived. For a highly instructive account of Lacedaemon, by a sympathetic hand, see Walter Pater's Plato and Platonism, c. 8.

λέγειν: to tell, recount; then, to speak, say. εἰ . . . ἀληθὴ ἐστὶν τὰ λεγόμενα, 'if the tale is true,' 40 E. κατὰ τὰ λεγόμενα ('tradition,' 'folklore') 40 C. δεινὸς λέγειν, 'a clever speaker,' 17 B. In particular λέγειν denotes the content of what is said (cp. λόγος), while φάναι (φάσκειν) is rather of opinion. τί λέγει φάσκων ἐμὲ σοφώτατον εἶναι, 'what does he mean by affirming, etc.' 21 B, cp. 21 E, 22 B, εἰ τοῦτο λέγουσιν 17 B. εἰ, κακῶς λέγειν τινά, 'to speak well' or 'ill of one'; cp. note on 23 A, and see ἀκούειν. μέγα λέγειν, 'to speak boastfully,' 'to boast,' 20 E. οὐδὲν λέγειν, 'to speak to no purpose,' 'to utter nonsense,' 30 B. λέγειν τι, 'to speak to some purpose,' 'to talk sense,' τῶν οἰομένων τι λέγειν Crit. 46 D.

Λεοντῖνος (Λεοντῖνοι): of Leontini, an Ionian city in Sicily, to the northwest and not far from Syracuse, 19 E. It was to seek aid for his native city, Leontini, against her powerful Dorian neighbor, that Gorgias the sophist visited Athens, 427 B. C.

Λέων, -οντος: Leon, an Athenian of the deme of Salamis, put to death without a trial by the Thirty Tyrants, 32 C. He was one of those who owed their death to the possession of wealth which excited the cupidity of the Thirty. Xenophon Hell. 2. 3. 39 mentions the execution of Leon, with vindication of his character; and records Mem. 4. 4. 3 the refusal of Socrates to obey the mandate of the Thirty when ordered to assist in arresting illegally an innocent person.

λόγος (λέγειν): tale, account; then, a speech, talk, discourse, the substance of anything spoken. τῶν θεῶν ὧν νῦν ὁ λόγος ἐστίν ('of whom we are now speaking') 26 B. Often in the plural, of any sort of speech-making or conversation. ἐκάστης ἡμέρας περὶ ἀρετῆς τοὺς λόγους ποιεῖσθαι, 'to be discoursing (talking) about virtue every day,'

38 A. ὥστερ μαιρακίω λόγους. πλάττοντι ('inventing,' 'making up stories') 17 C. κεκαλλιεπημένους, 'a speech ornately composed,' 17 D. λόγος is a generic word, covering ground where in English various specific terms are needed for purposes of translation, as in the celebrated phrase condemnatory of the sophists, τὸν ἥττω λόγον κρείττω ποιεῖν, 'to make the worse appear the better reason (argument),' 23 D, 18 B, 19 B. Cp. Ar. Nub. 112, εἶναι παρ' αὐτοῖς (the sophists) φασιν ἀμφὺ τῷ λόγῳ, | τὸν κρείττον', ὅστις ἐστὶ, καὶ τὸν ἥττονα. Ib. 882. Elsewhere in the play the terms δίκαιος λόγος and ἀδίκος λόγος are employed. Also Cic. Brut. 8, docere se profitebantur (the sophists), adrogantibus sane verbis, quemadmodum causa inferior dicendo fieri superior posset. The truth was called ὁ κρείττων λόγος because the natural superiority (in power) of truth over falsehood is instinctively recognized by the moral sense. λόγον ἔχειν, 'to have reason,' 'to have an explanation to offer' for anything, have something to say, be able to account for it naturally or rationally. εἰ μὲν . . . μισθὸν λαμβάνων ταῦτα παρεκελεύεμην, εἶχον ἂν τινα λόγον, 'if I took pay for these exhortations there would be some explanation of them for me to give' (I should seem to be acting in a way that could be accounted for by ordinary human motives), 31 B. Cp. οἱ ἀδιόφθαρτοι . . . τίνα ἄλλον ἔχουσι λόγον βοηθοῦντες ἐμοὶ ἀλλ' ἢ τὸν . . . δίκαιον ('what other reason can they have for aiding me than the right one') 34 B. λόγου ἀξίον, 'worthy of mention,' 23 B. λόγου ἕνεκα, 'just for talk,' Crit. 46 D. λόγῳ 'in word,' often opposed to ἔργῳ, 'in deed,' Apol. 40 B, Crit. 52 D.

Λύκων, -ωνος: Lycon, an Athenian, one of the accusers of Socrates, 23 E, 36 A. Plato makes him represent the rhetors (public speakers) in the prosecution, and assigns to him more influence than to Meletus. Lycon therefore must have held some prominence in the political life of the time. Whether the Lycon introduced in Xenophon's Symposium is identical with the accuser of Socrates is uncertain.

Λύσανίας: Lysanias, an Athenian of the deme of Sphettus, the father of Aeschines the Socratic, present at the trial of Socrates, 33 E.

μάλιστα (μάλα): most, chiefly, 18 C, 22 B, 23 C. μάλιστα πλησίον, 'nearest,' 25 D. As an affirmative answer, 'certainly,' 24 E. To denote an approximate statement of time or number. πηλίκᾳ μάλιστα, 'about what time,' Crit. 43 A. μάλιστα μὲν (followed by εἰ δὲ μή or some similar correlative phrase), 'if possible,' 'preferably,' Apol. 34 A.

μᾶλλον (μάλα): more, rather, 18 B, 28 D. μᾶλλον δέ, 'or rather,' Crit. 46 A, 49 E.

μανθάνειν: to learn, 22 B, 26 A. Idiomatic phrase, τί (ὃ τι) μαθῶν, 'why in the world?' in a tone of surprise or severity, 36 B. See H. 968 C, G. 1566, B. 653, N. 4. Some scholars, however, deny the genuineness of this usage, as inconsistent with the meaning of μαθεῖν, and restore τί παθών in those passages of Plato, Aristophanes, etc., where τί μαθών seems to be used in the same sense. See πάσχειν.

Μεγαράδε: to Megara (Μέγαρα, τά) Crit. 53 B. The Megarid lay west of Attica and south of Boeotia, from which it is separated by Mt. Cithaeron. The town of Megara was situated about a mile from the sea and had two ports, Nisaea on the Saronic and Pegae on the Corinthian Gulf.

μέλειν: μέλει μοί τινος, or with infinitive, I care for, am interested in something, or to do something, 24 C, 32 D. The thing cared for may be the subject of the verb, 24 C. Cp. οἶσθα μέλον γέ σοι (object of οἶσθα) 24 D. See Μέλητος.

Μέλητος: Meletus, an Athenian, one of the accusers of Socrates, 19 B, C, 23 E, 30 C, 31 D, 34 A, 35 D, 37 B. The indictment was filed in Meletus' name, tho' in fact the other two accusers were more influential men. A tragic poet of inferior merit, Meletus was a butt of the ridicule of comedy; see the commentators on Ar. Frogs 1302. In the Apology he is conceived as standing for the poets as a class, and is treated everywhere by Plato with contemptuous satire. See especially the plays upon his name (Μέλητος, ἐμέλησεν, μέλον, ἀμέλεια, μεμέληκεν) 24 C, D, 25 C, 26 B. In the Euthyphro 2 B he is named as of the deme of Pitthus and described as a young man (at the time of Socrates' trial) with long

μέλλειν: forms with the infinitive future or imperfect (rarely the aorist) a periphrastic expression of futurity. See HA. 846, G. 1254, B. 533, Gl. 570 b. μέλλω ὑμᾶς διδάξειν, 'I am going to instruct you,' 21 B. Cp. 31 D, where πράττειν is to be taken with μέλλω and mentally supplied with μέλλω. καὶ εἰ μέλλει ὀλίγον χρόνον σωθήσεσθαι, 'if he is to survive ('expects' to survive, as we say) even for a little while,' 32 A. μέλλουσιν ἡμῖν . . . ἀποδιδράσκειν ('when on the point of absconding')

Crit. 50 A. Very convenient is the past imperfect ἐμελλον with future infinitive when for any reason a future idea is not absolute but relative to a past action. εἰχομεν ἂν . . . ἐπιστάτην λαβεῖν . . . ὅς ἐμελλον αὐτὸν καλῶς τε κάθαρῶ ποιήσκειν ('who should make them fair and good') Apol. 20 A. Here the thought is of future; absolutely, ἐπιστάτην λαμβάνομεν δι ποιήσει, but in the passage quoted this thought adapts itself in form to the Past Potential εἰχομεν ἂν κτλ. ἐνταῦθα μὲν οὐκ ἦα, οἳ ἐλθὼν μήτε ὑμῖν μήτε ἐμμανῶ ἐμελλον μηδὲν ὄφελος εἶναι ('where, had I gone thither, I could have made myself of no use at all, etc.') 36 C. Here again there is a notion of purpose with the relative οἳ (note the form of the negative). εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἦν μοι χρήματα, ἐτιμωσάμην ἂν χρημάτων ὅσα ἐμελλον ἐκτεῖσειν, 'if I had money I would name a fine as large as I could pay,' 38 B. Here the fact that the payment would be subsequent to the naming of the fine

μέν: a postpositive particle of emphasis, never a connective, but always looking forward to some antitheton or contrasted member that is to follow, expressed or implied. The word or phrase, therefore, to which μέν is appended has always the emphatic position and is preceded by a greater or less pause in reading: e.g. ἀλλὰ | δοκεῖν μέν μοι | ἤξει τήμερον Crit. 43 D, σοὶ δὲ | ὑπάρχει μέν τὰ ἐμά χρήματα 45 B. The correlative particle to μέν is regularly δέ, often μέντοι 20 D, 38 D, sometimes other words, as ἔπειτα 21 B, Crit. 45 B, ἀλλ' ὅμως Apol. 34 D. Sometimes there is no single word answering to μέν preceding, cp. Μέλητον μέν 36 A, Crit. 43 D. Tho' for the most part hardly translatable, μέν finds in some connections precise English equivalents, 'to be sure,' 'indeed' (Lat. quidem), etc. ἔπρω | μεγάλῳ μέν καὶ γενναίῳ, ὑπὸ μεγέθους δὲ νωθεστέρω, 30 E, cp. 38 D. Clauses introduced by μέν and δέ are always coördinate in Greek, but in translating it is sometimes advisable to treat the μέν clause as if it were subordinate to what follows it, 'though,' 'while,' etc. οἶδε μέν γὰρ οὐδὲς τὸν θάνατον . . . δεδῶσιν δὲ κτλ., 'tho' no man knows what death is, yet all men fear it,' etc. 29 A, cp. 20 D, 29 D, 40 A, Crit. 50 E end. See note on Apol. 37 C. The perspicuity of many a rhetorical period depends upon the distinct marking of antitheses by means of μέν and δέ; and this clearness of contrast may

μέντοι: indeed, however; a postpositive asseverative particle. καὶ μέντοι ('verily') καὶ πάντ' οὗτο ὑμῶν δέομαι 17 C, cp. 32 D. οὐ μέντοι, 'no indeed,' 26 E. Thus μέντοι is often clearly seen to be a strengthened μέν (+ τοί), cp. ἀποκτείνει μέντοι ('to be sure') δν 30 D, cp. 37 C. But, on the other hand, μέντοι has acquired a certain adversative force (41 E, Crit. 43 D) and thus frequently appears as the correlative to μέν, instead of δέ, 20 D, 38 D. In crasis μεντ'δν = μέντοι δν.

μή: not; as final particle, lest, that not. μή expresses negation as conceived, while οὐ expresses absolute negation. Thus μή not, with its compounds, is the appropriate negative for clauses of finality, for conditional clauses and participles with conditional force, and, ordinarily, for the infinitive (for exceptions see οὐ). μή ὑπέκων δὲ ἅμα κἀν ἀπολομένην, 'but, never yielding (a case merely conceived of), I would even perish thereby,' 32 A. μὲθ' ὑμῶν γενέσθαι μὴ δίκαια βουλευομένων, 'to side with you engaged in unrighteous deliberations,' 32 C. Here μὴ δίκαια denotes injustice viewed in a general way, as characteristic of the action of the people, while οὐ would have marked simply those particular deliberations as not tending to justice. μὴ οὐτι, 'not only,' 'not merely,' 40 D; an elliptical phrase, originally 'do not say that,' etc. See HA. 1035 A, G. 1504, B. 442 n. μὴ οὐ, with infinitive (with or without the article). οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς ἐπιλύεται ἡ ἡλικία τὸ μὴ οὐχὶ ἀγανακτεῖν Crit. 43 C. Cp. οὐκ ἀνατίθεται μὴ οὐχὶ πᾶν χαριέντως . . . ἀποδεδεῖχθαι Phaed. 87 A. Thus μὴ with the infinitive after verbs of negation (denying, hindering, preventing, etc.) repeats the negative idea contained in the meaning of the main verb (ἐπιλύεται μὴ ἀγανακτεῖν). If that verb is itself negated, as above by οὐδὲν, a second negative regularly appears with the infinitive. Both negatives are idiomatic and untranslatable. See HA. 1034 A, G. 1616, B. 434, Gl. 572 a. For οὐ μὴ, see οὐ. μὴ is sometimes used with the subjunctive in cautious assertions or negations (μὴ . . . οὐ). μὴ . . . ταῦτα . . . σκέμματα ἢ τῶν βαδῶν ἀποκτινύντων, 'I suspect these are considerations characteristic of those who lightly put men to death,' Crit. 48 C. μὴ οὐδὲν ἄλλο σκεπτόν ἢ ἡ ὅπερ νῦν δὴ ἐλέγομεν, 'I am inclined to think we ought to take nothing else into consideration than what we were just now saying,' ib. cp. μὴ οὐ δέη, 48 D, Apol. 39 A. See HA. 867, G. 1350. μὴ introduces questions which expect a negative answer (Lat. num). μὴ αὐτὸν οἶε φροντίσαι θανάτου, 'do you suppose he took thought of death,' 28 D. Similarly ἄρα μὴ Crit. 44 E. (But ἄρ' οὐ = nonne.)

μηδέ: and not, nor, not even, not at all, 17 B. For the difference between μηδέ and μήτε, see οὐδέ and οὔτε. The difference there explained is illustrated 30 A, B: πείθων ὑμῶν καὶ νεωτέρους καὶ πρεσβυτέρους μήτε σωμάτων ἐπιμελεῖ-σθαι μήτε χρημάτων πρότερον μηδὲ οὕτω σφόδρα ὥς τῆς ψυχῆς, 'urging both the younger and the older among you to care for neither the body nor goods sooner or (μηδέ) so sorely as for the soul.' Here μήτε . . . μήτε might have been preceded by μὴ to introduce the whole negative idea of which the two correlatives denote a subdivision (cp. the passage quoted under μήτε); but μηδέ adds a new negation, οὕτω σφόδρα, to that already stated in (μὴ) πρότερον.

μήτε: subdivides (with its correlative or correlatives) a negative statement introduced by μὴ expressed or implied. μὴ πρότερον μήτε τῶν ἑαυτοῦ ἐπιμελεῖσθαι μήτε τῶν τῆς πόλεως (neither . . . nor) 36 C. See οὔτε, also μηδέ.

Μίνως, -ως: Minos, an ancient king of Crete, who upon his death became one of the judges of the shades in Hades, 41 A. See the Odyssey λ 568: ἐνθ' ἦτοι Μίνωα Ἴδον, Διὸς ἀγλαὸν υἱόν, | χρύσεον σκήπτρον ἔχοντα, θεμ- στεύοντα νέκυσσιν, | ἤμενον· οἱ δὲ μιν ἀμφὶ δίκας εἶροντο ἀνακτα, | ἤμενοι ἐσταότες τε κατ' εὐρυπυλῆς Ἀΐδος δῶ.

Μουσαῖος: Musaeus, an ancient bard popularly believed to have lived before the time of Homer, 41 A. The names of Musaeus and Orpheus are often found coupled in literary allusions. See Ὀρφεύς.

μοχθηρία: wickedness, 39 B.

μοχθηρός (μόχθος) 3: miserable, wretched, Crit. 47 E; then, wicked, Apol. 25 E. μοχθηρός and πονηρός are current synonyms of κακός. Compare χρηστός, a frequent synonym of ἀγαθός.

N

ναυμαχία (ναῦς, μάχεσθαι): a naval combat, sea-fight. ἡ ναυμαχία 32 B, the battle of the Arginussae Islands (near Malea, the southeastern cape of Lesbos), August, 406 B.C. The Athenians were victorious over the Lacedaemonians in this engagement, having got together by extraordinary efforts 150 triremes, the opposing fleet consisting of 120. Callicratidas, the Lacedaemonian commander, was lost. On the Athenian side 25 ships had been disabled, and a large number of the men who formed their crews were left to perish, the generals alleging afterward that they were prevented by a storm which arose from attending to the duty of rescuing them. Of the ten generals one, Canon, had not been concerned in the battle. The other nine were superseded and directed to come home. Two of them, warned of the displeasure of the people, declined to come, preferring to pay the price of voluntary exile. One of the original ten had recently died at Mitylene. The remaining six, Erasinides, Aristocrates, Diomedon, Pericles, Lysias, and Thrasylus, returned to Athens to stand their trial before the ecclesia for leaving the crews of the disabled triremes to be drowned, and of neglecting all efforts to rescue them. Plato's expression τοὺς δέκα στρατηγούς 32 B (ten being the number of the whole board of strategi) is not meant to be adapted to the particulars of the case. Briefly, the result of the trial was the condemnation of the six generals.

They were put to death by the draught of hemlock, and their property was confiscated to the state. At the tribal festival of the Apaturia, which happened to occur between the two meetings of the assembly at which the case of the generals was considered, the popular excitement, the sentiment of grief and indignation against the accused, was raised to the highest pitch. Thus it could happen that an unconstitutional proposal to vote upon the guilt and punishment of the six generals by one collective ballot (the law requiring each man's case to be considered separately) was entertained and acted upon. It was this illegality, not any question as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, which caused Socrates, who as ἐπιστάτης τῶν πρυτάνεων was chairman of the Assembly on the day of the trial, resolutely to refuse to put the question to vote. See βουλή. His protest was overruled and the vote taken by some more complaisant member of the board. See Xen. Hell. I. 7. Grote, History of Greece, vol. 8, c. 64.

νομίζειν (νόμος): to own as custom or usage (τὰ νομιζόμενα, 'the customary rites,' Symp. 176 A); to regard, believe, think. ὅτε . . . σωφροσύνη 'νένομστο ('was in vogue') Ar. Clouds 962. θεὸς νομίζειν, 'to believe in gods,' Apol. 18 C, 23 D, 24 B, 26 B. The transition to the current meaning think is illustrated 26 C νομίζω εἶναι θεούς, D ἥλιον . . . σελήνην νομίζω θεούς εἶναι. Cp. 27 B, C. α̇ . . . οἰηθεῖη ἂν τις καὶ νομίζεται ἑσχατα κακῶν εἶναι 40 A. νομίζειν regularly takes accusative and infinitive, but the omission of εἶναι with this verb is far more frequent, as might be expected from its meaning, than with any of its synonyms, ἡγεῖσθαι, δοκεῖν, οἰεσθαι.

νόμος: custom, law. τῶν τοιούτων ἀμαρτημάτων οὐ δεῦρο νόμος εἰσάγειν ἐστίν ('it is not usual,' i.e. not right or reasonable) 26 A. ὁ νόμος 25 D, οἱ νόμοι 24 E, Crit. 50 A.

Ὀδυσσεύς, -εύς: Odysseus (Lat. Ulysses or Ulixes), king of Ithaca, whose wanderings after the capture of Troy and return to his home in the twentieth year form the theme of the Odyssey of Homer, 41 B. Odysseus is named in the Apology as one of those whose rich experience of life would render them worthy subjects of examination by Socrates in the Lower World.

οἰεσθαι: to think, surmise, fancy; οἰομαι or οἶμαι, ᾤμην or ᾤμην; in crasis, ἐγώμαι = ἐγὼ οἰομαι, 37 A. οἰόμενοι βλάπτειν, 'fancying that they did harm,' 41 D. οἰήθητε δεῖν πρὸς ἐκείνους πρῶτόν με ἀπολογησασθαι, 'conceive that I must first make a defense to them,' 18 E, cp. 32 C. ὅτι οἶοιτο μὲν εἶναι σοφός, εἰη δ' οὐ, 'that he fancied himself wise, but was not,' 21 C. α̇ μὴ οἶδα οὐδὲ οἰομαι εἰδέναι, 'what I don't know I do not think I know,' 21 D. Often with an infinitive of the future, where we say 'expect,' 35 A, 36 A, 39 D, Crit. 44 A, 53 C, 54 D. ὡς ἐγὼ οἶμαι, 'as I remember it,' Apol. 28 C. οἰεσθαι γε χρή, 'we must certainly suppose so,' Crit. 53 C, 54 B. See the synonyms, δοκεῖν, ἡγεῖσθαι, νομίζειν.

Ὅμηρος: Homer, the great poet of the old epos, 34 D, 41 A. The Homeric poems were a sort of Bible to the Greeks, and it used to be said that Hellas had received her education from Homer, ὡς τὴν Ἑλλάδα πεπαλδευκεν οὗτος ὁ ποιητής, Rep. 606 E. The Iliad and Odyssey are often quoted from in the dialogues of Plato, cp. Apol. 28 C, 34 D, Crit. 44 B. Tho' such quotations are sometimes made to enforce a moral purpose, as 28 C above cited, yet in general Plato protests vigorously against the bad influence of Homer and the other 'myth-makers' in the education of youth. See Rep. 377 ff.

Ὀρφεύς, -εύς: Orpheus, an ancient bard popularly believed to have lived before the time of Homer, 41 A. The names of Orpheus and Musaeus are often coupled to represent a body of ancient minstrelsy, chiefly of a priestly or religious character,—oracles, hymns, theogonies, and the like,—which has now disappeared with the exception of a few inconsiderable fragments. Certain poetical works now extant under the name of Orpheus are known to have had a late origin, and probably much that passed as Orphic in the time of Plato was of no great antiquity. Plato mentions Orpheus and Musaeus here and there in his dialogues, and gives several brief quota-

ὀρχήστρα (ὀρχεῖσθαι to dance): orchestra, usually the central space of the Greek theater, in which the dramatic chorus had its position. But Apol. 26 Ε ἡ ὀρχήστρα is named as a place where books could be purchased, the reference being probably to an 'orchestra' in Athens other than that of the theater, a public place of which brief mention has been preserved in the Lexicon to Plato of Timaeus the Sophist.

οὐ, οὐκ(χ), οὐχί, in final position οὐ: not, no. οὐ differs from μή in expressing negation absolutely. See μή. Tho' the usual negative with the infinitive is μή, yet it may be οὐ when an infinitive conveys a fact of negation. ἔδοξέ μοι οὗτος . . . δοκεῖν μὲν εἶναι σοφός, . . . εἶναι δ' οὐ, 21 C, D. Here what Socrates came to believe was δοκεῖ μὲν εἶναι σοφός, ἔστι δ' οὐ; in effect the same as οὐκ ἔδοξέ μοι σοφός εἶναι. Cp. 26 C παντάσῃ με φησὶ οὕτε αὐτὸν νομίζειν θεοὺς κτλ.; like οὐ φησὶ με νομίζειν. In cases like those above quoted we may say that the negative is retained in the form proper to the thought. Again, altho' the regular negative in a conditional clause is μή, yet sometimes οὐ is united so closely to a single word with which it forms a sort of phrase that it is retained even in a condition. ἐάν τε σὺ καὶ Ἄνυτος οὐ φῆτε ἐάν τε φῆτε (phrase, οὐ φημι I deny) 25 B. See φάναι. Similarly, ὥστε οὐκ εἰδέναι, 'so as to be ignorant,' 26 D. Forcible negation may be expressed by οὐ μή with the subjunctive, 29 D, Crit. 46 C; or with the future indicative, Crit. 44 B. See HA. 1032, G. 1360, Gl. 489. The negative is doubled for the sake of emphasis and, to avoid cacophony, not by repeating the same word. See B. 432. οὐ πάνν, not very (much), said mildly (Attic) for 'not at all,' Crit. 48 A, cp. Apol. 41 D.

οὐδέ: and not, nor, not even, not at all, 17 C. οὐδέ (the same is true of μηδέ) is never a correlative word, but always adds a new negation to one already expressed or implied. Thus Crit. 54 C οὐδέ occurs three times to enlarge successively the negative member introduced by the former οὔτε of two correlatives: (οὔτε . . . ἐνθάδε) σοι . . . ἀμεινον . . . οὐδέ δικάϊότερον οὐδέ ὁσιώτερον οὐδέ ἀλλω . . . (οὔτε ἐκεῖσε ἀφικόμενῳ ἀμεινον), '(neither here) better or more just or more holy for you or for another (nor better there, etc.).' Οὐδέ (μηδέ) in negation corresponds to καὶ (and, also, even) in affirmative use. ἐγὼ ὥσπερ οὐκ οἶδα, οὐδέ οἶμαι ('so also I do not think so') Apol. 21 D. οὐδέ γ' εἰ . . . ἀκηκόατε . . . οὐδέ τοῦτο ἀληθές, 'no, nor if, . . . this is not true either' (this also is false), 19 D. Cp. οὐδέ δίκαιον 35 C, and the note. Thus οὐδέ (μηδέ) is essentially different from οὔτε (μήτε), which is always correlative. See οὔτε. In cases where οὐδέ seems to answer to a preceding οὔτε there is anacoluthon, the speaker shifting his point of view ungrammatically and not ending his sentence as the beginning of it required. Apol. 19 D.

οὔτε, neither . . . nor. The same is true of μήτε . . . μήτε. Thus these words divide one negation, whether that negation be (1) indicated as a whole at the outset by οὐκ, οὐδέ (μή, μηδέ), or be (2) merely implied by the correlatives themselves. (1) ὦν ἐγὼ οὐδὲν | οὔτε μέγα οὔτε μικρὸν πέρι ἐπαίω 19 C. (So with μή 36 C, twice.) (2) ἐγὼ γάρ δὴ οὔτε μέγα οὔτε μικρὸν ξύννοια ἐμαντῶ σοφὸς ὦν 21 B. Often οὔτε and τέ are correlative, a combination easy in Greek but awkward for purposes of translation. παντάπασί με φῆς οὔτε αὐτὸν νομίζειν θεοὺς τοὺς τε ἄλλους ταῦτα διδάσκειν, 'you assert that I am both myself a total disbeliever in gods and teach this unbelief to other men,' 26 C. See οὐδέ.

ὀφλισκάνειν: to owe, incur debt. In law, δίκην ὀφλεῖν, 'to be cast in a suit,' 'to be fined' or 'condemned to' undergo some punishment. θανάτου δίκην ὀφλὼν 39 B. κὰν ὦφε χιλίας δραχμάς, 'he would even have incurred a fine of a thousand drachmas,' 36 A, cp. 39 B and the note.

πάθος, -ους, τό, (πάσχειν): an affection, experience, of mind or body. τοιοῦτόν τι ἐφάνησαν πάθος πεπονθότες, 'in some such way they were seen to be affected,' 22 C. Here the πάθος consisted in an inability to explain one's own utterances (combined with a conceit of knowledge notwithstanding). τὰ ἐμαντοῦ πάθη, 'my own sufferings,' 41 B. But agreeable experiences would have been designated by the same word. See πάσχειν.

Παλαμήδης: Palamedes, son of Nauplius, of Nauplia in Argos, one of the Greeks warring against Troy, 41 B. Palamedes was a sort of counterpart of Odysseus, distinguished for his wise counsels and his stratagems. In the post-Homeric legends the two heroes are involved in mutual enmity and conflict. Being in favor of a peace, Palamedes was falsely accused of treason and collusion with King Priam, condemned therefor, and stoned to death.

Πάραλος, Paralus, an Athenian, son of Demodocus and brother of Theāges, present at the trial of Socrates, 33 E.

πάσχειν: means to be a subject of experience, as acted upon from without or inwardly affected in some way, to suffer good or ill, 35 A, 36 B, 42, Crit. 47 C. εὖ, κακῶς πάσχειν, 'to be well' or 'ill treated,' 49 D. ἢ μὴν ἐγὼ ἔπαθόν τι τοιοῦτον, 'I declare to you I was affected in some such way' as I shall describe, Apol. 22 A. The explanation of this experience (πάθος) on the part of Socrates, this impression that he gained, is given in ἔδοξαν κτλ. Cp. 22 C, where the state of mind of the men themselves whom Socrates examined is described, τοιοῦτόν τι ἐφάνησαν πάθος πεπονθότες. See πάθος. Thus πάσχειν is a verb essentially passive in its signification, hence its frequent connection with a genitive and ὑπό. ὅτι μὲν ὑμεῖς πεπόνθατε ὑπὸ τῶν ἐμῶν κατηγορῶν οὐκ οἶδα, 'how you have been affected by my accusers (i.e. by their harangues) I know not,' 17 A. (In the next clause ὑπ' αὐτῶν can be joined with ἐπελαβέμην because 'I forgot' is a sort of ἔπαθον—forgetting is a πάθος.) Nevertheless, since πάσχειν implies feeling it may be joined with πρός and an accusative denoting the person toward whom the feeling goes out (after being excited by that person). πρός δὲ ἐγὼ . . . τοιοῦτόν τι ἔπαθον 21 C. Cp. ταῦτόν οὖν ἔγωγε τοῦτο πάσχω καὶ πρὸς τοὺς φιλοσοφούντας, 'for my part I am affected in this same way toward those who cultivate philosophy,' Gorg. 485 C. (We should be apt to say, reversing the relation, 'those who cultivate philosophy impress me in the same way.') The idiomatic phrase τί (δὲ τι) παθών, παθόντες ('having suffered what,' i.e. why in the world) expresses an interrogation, direct or indirect, in a tone of surprise or severity. See HA. 968 C, G. 1566. (For the similar idiom τί μαθών, see μανθάνειν.)

Πάτροκλος: Patroclus, the son of Menoetius, bosom friend of Achilles, 28 C. While Achilles in his wrath held himself aloof from battle, and the Greeks had come to be in sore straits, Patroclus was moved to don the armor of Achilles and go forth to fight, II 1-220. He was slain and stripped of the arms by Hector, ib. 818 ff. It was the death of Patroclus that finally turned the mind of Achilles and caused him to take the field once more against Hector and the Trojans, Σ 18 ff.

πείθειν: to urge, persuade, τινά. Middle and passive πειθεσθαι, to obey, comply with, believe, τινί, 38 A, Crit. 44 B, C; to be prevailed upon, persuaded, ἐπελσθητε Apol. 37 B. In the active voice the imperfect stem is usually conative, 'try to persuade,' cp. 18 B, 30 A, 35 C. But as historical present (which is the equivalent of the aorist indicative), and in some other uses, πείθω may denote fulfillment, like an aorist. ὕμᾱς τοῦτο οὐ πείθω, 'I do not succeed in making you believe this,' 37 A. The aorist participle πείσας is idiomatically employed as the opposite of βιά perforce or of ἄκων against one's will. περὶ πολλοῦ ποιῶμαι πείσας σε ('after gaining your consent') ταῦτα πράττειν ἀλλὰ μὴ ἄκοντος Crit. 48 E. ἀπώντες ἐνθὲν δὲ μὴ πείσαντες τὴν πόλιν ('without permission from the city') 49 E. πείθειν may be followed by an accusative and infinitive, 'to persuade one to do something,' as τούτους πείθουσιν σφίσιν ξυνεῖναι Apol. 20 A. Differently with ὅτι or ὥς and a finite mode (the dependent clause sometimes in apposition to a cognate accusative like τοῦτο 37 A), 'to make one believe' that something is or is not true, 27 E. Cp. πείθειν αὐτὴν ἥ τὸ δίκαιον πέφυκε (indirect question) Crit. 51 C. Perf. pass. πέπεισμαι, 'I have made up my mind,' 'am determined,' πέπεισμαι . . . μὴδένα ἀδικεῖν ἀνθρώπων Apol. 37 A. πεπεισμένος . . . ἐγὼ ('determined as I am') μὴδένα ἀδικεῖν 37 B.

Πλάτων, -ωνος: Plato, the philosopher, 34 A, 38 B. Born 427 B.C., Plato was twenty-eight years old at the time of the death of Socrates. His family, belonging to the deme Collytus, was noble and wealthy. Aristo, his father, traced his descent from king Codrus, while his mother, Perictione, was related to the family of Solon, the lawgiver. He had two brothers, Adimantus (Apol. 34 A) and Glauco. See the Republic, and, for Glauco, also Xen. Mem. 3. 6. On the mother's side Plato was related to Charmides and Critias, the interlocutors with Socrates in the dialogue entitled Charmides, and known to history in connection with the oligarchy of the Thirty and the Ten. Charmides was the brother of Plato's mother, and Critias the cousin of Charmides. By temperament a poet, Plato, it is said, at first devoted himself to the arts of poetry and music, but renounced poetic composition for philosophy when he attached himself to Socrates at about the age of twenty. After the death of Socrates in 399 B.C., we are told that Plato, with other companions of the sage, withdrew to Megara. Then follow his reputed travels in foreign lands, Cyrene, Egypt, and Italy. He is said to have made three journeys to Syracuse in Sicily, the first in 387 B.C. At the court of Dionysius the Younger, Plato and Dion, mentor of the youthful despot, finally failed, if the story be a true one, in their efforts to bring into being an ideal king and state. It was shortly after the first visit to Sicily that Plato began to teach or lecture at Athens in a garden adjoining the precinct sacred to the Hero Acadēmus, about a mile from the city on the road to Eleusis. The Academy of Plato, the earliest of the schools of philosophy in Greece, was attended by many afterward eminent in philosophy or letters, and the fame of the founder became world-wide. Until his death, at the age of eighty, in 347 B.C., Plato was engaged in teaching and in the composition of his written works. Forty-two dialogues have been preserved under his name, about one third of the number being regarded as spurious or of doubtful authenticity. There are also thirteen letters attributed to Plato that are probably not genuine. Plato is the foremost and greatest of the Attic prose writers. The dialogue admits the characteristics of every literary form, and the Platonic writing is free from the conventional trammels to which historical and oratorical composition were subjected. Philosophy had not yet learned to disguise her thoughts under a phraseology calculated to repel the unprofessional reader. The poetic flavor that enters upon occasion into Plato's prose is a further source of freedom and power. With all the wide dramatic range of the dialogues (in which the author never appears in propria persona), with all the variety of philosophic speculation probed or outlined, the Platonic style carries with it a pervading sense of original force, of a consistent dominating personality.

ποιεῖν: to make, cause, do. ἔγνω . . . περὶ τῶν ποιητῶν . . . ὅτι οὐ σοφία ποιοῖεν ἀ ποιοῖεν ('what they made,' viz. their poems) 22 B. Cp. ἐπεποιήκεσαν ἰδ. τοῦτο δ' ἐμοὶ πεποίηκεν τό τε δνομα καὶ τὴν διαβολήν 20 D. ἐάν τινα μοχθήρῳ ποιήσω τῶν ξυνότων, 'if I make any of my companions bad,' 25 E. ταῦτα καὶ νεωτέρῳ καὶ πρεσβυτέρῳ ποιήσω, 'this I shall do both for young and for old,' 30 A. But the usual construction is the double accusative, ποιεῖν τινά τι. Cp. οἱ πονηροὶ κακὸν τι ἐργάζονται τοὺς ἐγγυτάτω ἐαυτῶν ὄντας 25 C. So often with adverb, τὸ κακῶς ποιεῖν ἀνθρώπους τοῦ ἀδικεῖν οὐδὲν διαφέρει Crit. 49 C. πλέον ποιεῖν, 'to profit,' 'gain advantage,' εἰ τι οἶμαι πλέον ποιήσῃς, 'if you expect to accomplish something thereby,' Crit. 54 D, Apol. 19 A. Mid. ποιεῖσθαι, to make or get made for oneself, Apol. 23 A, Crit. 52 C; then, 'to make out,' 'regard,' 'deem.' Thus in phrases with περί. ἄλλο τι ἢ περί πολλοῦ ποιεῖ ('deem it very important') ὅπως ὡς βέλτιστοι . . . ἔσονται Apol. 24 C. τὰ πλείστου ἀξία περί ἐλαχίστου ποιεῖται, 'the things that are of most worth he treats as of least value,' 30 A. χρήματα περί πλείονος ποιεῖσθαι ἢ φίλους 'to hold property in higher esteem than friends,' Crit. 44 C, 48 E, 54 B. With substantives as object ποιεῖσθαι forms a periphrasis for a middle voice of the verb allied to the substantive. λόγους ποιεῖσθαι (i.e. λέγειν, but mid.) Apol. 27 B, 38 A. ἀποδημίαν ποιήσασθαι Crit. 52 B. See γίγνεσθαι. Synonyms, δρᾶν, ἐργάζεσθαι, πράττειν.

ποίησις, -εως, ἡ: a making of poetry, 22 C.

ποιητής: maker, poet, 22 A.

πολυπράγμονεῖν (πολυπράγμων, πράττειν): to be a busybody, to be officious, meddlesome, 31 C. A common fault of the Athenian character was πολυπραγμοσύνη. The opposite idea to πολυπραγμονεῖν is expressed by ἡσυχίαν ἀγειν, 'to mind one's business.' See ἡσυχία. Plato makes Socrates apply the derogatory term to himself Apol. 31 C, adopting the language of his enemies and detractors. What from Socrates' point of view was λέγειν καὶ τὰ ἐμαυτοῦ πράττειν ('attending to my own affair'), 33, A, was to them πολυπραγμονεῖν, 'attending to other people's business.'

πονηρός (πόνος) 3: bad, wicked. ἐν πολίταις χρηστοῖς ἢ πονηροῖς (i.e. ἀγαθοῖς ἢ κακοῖς) 25 C, cp. Crit. 47 A. πονηρός and μοχθηρός are current synonyms of κακός.

Ποτιδαῖα: Potidaea, a Dorian town on the isthmus of Pallēne in Chalcidice, 28 E. Originally colonized from Corinth, it was later one of the tributary allies of Athens, Thuc. 1. 56. In the year 432 B.C., shortly before the outbreak of the Peloponnesian War, Potidaea at the instigation of Corinth revolted. It was immediately invested by the Athenians, and capitulated after a blockade of two years. The siege had been a costly one and the hardships of the blockading army severe, especially during the winter season. Socrates served as a hoplite in the Athenian army and was present in the battle fought with the Corinthians and Potidaeans immediately before the siege. Here he saved the life of Alcibiades who had been wounded, and declined the prize of valor in the fight, when Alcibiades, to whom the generals awarded it, wished to turn it over to Socrates. The passage cited below bears testimony also to the extraordinary powers of endurance exhibited by Socrates, wearing no more than his usual garments during the coldest weather, and going barefooted with ease thro' the ice and snow. It was at Potidaea, too, that his fellow soldiers once saw the philosopher stand wrapt in meditation all day from sunrise and thro' the following night until the sun rose again. See Symp. 219 E, 220.

πράττειν: to act, proceed, do, 31 D, 33 A, Crit. 44 C, 47 B. πράττειν answers to Lat agere, ποιεῖν to facere. ἐκείνο μόνον σκοπεῖν, ὅταν πράττῃ, πότῃ δίκαια ἢ ἀδίκῃ πράττει, 'to look to this alone, when engaged in any course of action, whether what he is doing is right or wrong,' Apol. 28 B. Often εὖ, κακῶς πράττειν, of good or ill success. ὁ τι δὲ τύχῳσι (sc. πράξαντες) τοῦτο πράξουσιν, 'the merest chance will determine what shall be their fate' (they will fare only as they happen to fare), Crit. 45 D: πράττειν thus verges closely on the meaning of πάσχειν. Cp. Apol. 40 A, C. Mid. χρήματα, μισθὸν πράττεσθαι, 'to make money,' 'exact pay,' 19 E. With acc. of the person made to pay, ὡς ἐγὼ ποτέ τινα ἢ ἐπραξάμην μισθὸν ἢ ἦρξα 31 C. Synonyms, δρᾶν, ἐργάζεσθαι, ποιεῖν.

Πρόδικος: Prodicus, of Iulis in the isle of Ceos, a sophist, 19 E. He was one of the most renowned of the professional teachers. A subject to which he paid especial attention was the doctrine of synonyms. This specialty of Prodicus is mildly satirized by Plato in the Protagoras 337, 340 ff, 358. But the most popular lecture of Prodicus, for which he obtained the largest audience, was based upon the well-known fable called "The Choice of Hercules" or "The Parting of the Ways." The substance of this discourse is given by Xenophon, Mem. 2. 1. 21-34. The youthful hero is approached at a critical point in his career by two female forms, Vice and Virtue, each of whom pleads eloquently to make him her own.

πρυτανεῖον: Prytanæum, strictly the place of the prytanes (see βουλή), 36 D. The Prytaneum of a Greek city bore the same relation to the community at large as the private house bore to the family. It was the "hearthstone of the state" (ἑστία πόλεως), and a fire was kept continually burning on the public altar of the city in the Prytaneum, just as in private homes a fire was kept up on the domestic altar in the inner court. The Prytaneum of Athens was situated north of the acropolis, near the agora. The city of Athens exercised in its Prytaneum the duties of hospitality both toward its own citizens and toward strangers. Foreign ambassadors were entertained here, as well as Athenian envoys on their return from a successful mission. Moreover, the state conferred upon citizens who in consequence of personal or ancestral services to the community were regarded as its benefactors (εὐεργέται) the privilege of taking their meals in the Prytaneum at the public cost (σίτησις ἐν πρυτανείῳ).

This honor was also conferred upon victors in the Olympic Games, as mentioned by Plato in the passage where Socrates is made to propose to his judges that he should be maintained at the public expense as a benefactor to the state, Apol. 36 D, E.

Πυθία: the Pythia or Pythoress, priestess of Apollo at the temple of Delphi. See Δελφοί.

P

Ῥαδάμανθυς, -νος: Rhadamanthys, brother of Minos, made after his death one of the judges in the Lower World, as a reward for his virtues in life, 41 A. In the Gorgias 524 Rhadamanthys is represented as judging those from Asia, Aeacus those from Europe, while Minos exercises the final decision in doubtful cases. In the Odyssey Rhadamanthys is ruler of the Elysian Plain (Ἠλύσιον πεδῖον), δ 564.

Σ

Σαλαμῖνος 3: of Salamis, 32 C.

Σαλαμίς, -τινος, ἡ: Salamis, an island off the western coast of Attica, forming the southern boundary of the Bay of Eleusis, 32 C, D. Its greatest length, from north to south, is about ten miles; its width, in the broadest part, from east to west, a little more. Salamis was an independent state until about 620 B.C., when, a dispute for its possession arising between Megara and Athens, it first fell into the hands of the Megarians, and then thro' a stratagem of Solon was taken possession of by the Athenians and became one of the Attic demes. Cp. Solon fr. 3: τομεν εἰς Σαλαμίνα, μαχησόμενοι περὶ νῆσον | ἡμερτῆς, χαλεπὸν τ' ἀλσος ἀπωσόμενοι. Salamis is finally memorable for the great battle fought off its coast, when the Persian fleet of Xerxes was defeated by the Greeks, 480 B.C.

Σιμμία: Simmias, a Theban, a friend of Socrates, Crit. 45 B. See Κέβης.

Σίσυφος: Sisyphus, founder and king of Ephrya, afterward Corinth, 41 C. See the Iliad Z 152. The name of Sisyphus became proverbial for fraud and trickery, and famous for the punishment which he had to undergo in the Lower World—rolling a huge stone up hill that continually rolled back just before attaining the summit, Odyssey λ 593. Cp. Gorg. 525 E. But in the Apology Plato mentions him, along with Odysseus the fertile-minded, without derogatory suggestion of any sort. And in the passage cited above from the Iliad nothing worse is said of Sisyphus, grandfather of the 'blameless Bellerophon,' than κέρδιστος γένετ' ἀνδρῶν.

Σούνιον: Sunium, a promontory forming the southeast corner of the Athenian territory, Crit. 43 D. Ships bound for Athens could be sighted early from the heights of Sunium.

σοφία: wisdom. Ordinarily the word signified the possession of positive knowledge and the skill pertaining to learned or artistic accomplishments. See σοφός. Thus of Athens, πόλεως τῆς μεγίστης καὶ εὐδοκίμοτάτης εἰς σοφίαν 29 D. And of the artisans, ἐκείνην τὴν σοφίαν 22 D.

Socrates, however, in the Apology is made to give a higher and profound signification, of negative import, to σοφία, which he deduces from the suggestions of an oracle that had pronounced him the wisest of men. οὗτος ὑμῶν, ὃ ἀνθρώποι, σοφώτατός ἐστιν, ὅστις ὥσπερ Σωκράτης ἔγνωκεν ὅτι οὐδενὸς ἀξιώσ ἐστι τῇ ἀληθείᾳ πρὸς σοφίαν, 23 B. This is ἀνθρωπίνη σοφία, the only wisdom of which man is capable, 20 D. For God alone is truly wise, τὸ δὲ κινδυνεύει τῷ ὄντι ὁ θεὸς σοφὸς εἶναι 23 A. Man, by accepting only reasoned truth as his own possession, arrives at a sense of his limitations in regard to knowledge. Wisdom consists in the fullness of this sense of what one does not know. For Socrates, σοφία thus comes to be the substantive answering to εἰδέναι τι and to φρονίμως ἔχειν 22 A. See εἰδέναι.

σοφιστής: sophist, properly one who has made himself "wise" (σεσοφισμένος ἀνὴρ) 20 A. Then, a teacher, dealing with the higher education, giving instruction especially in rhetoric and dialectic, as did Protagoras, the greatest of the sophists, and others. See Γοργίας, Ἰππίας, Πρόδικος. No disparaging sense attaches to the word σοφιστής in itself considered, but a popular prejudice against the sophists arose early, and later was especially fostered by the Platonic writings. The stock reproach against them was, τὸν ἥττω λόγον κρείττω ποιεῖν, "making the worse appear the better reason," 18 B. See λόγος. This accusation, however, they bore in common with all who were given to philosophizing, 23 D. From philosophers in general the sophists were distinguished as (itinerant) teachers. The sophists are contrasted with Socrates by Plato particularly with reference to their arrogation of positive knowledge and their custom of taking pay for the instruction which they imparted. Socrates, on the other hand, declined to receive pay from those who listened to his conversations, and disclaimed the ability to "teach" men anything, 33 A, B. See σοφία. The strongly condemnatory view of the sophists as a class that has prevailed among modern scholars, especially the Germans, — due mainly to the satirical irony of Plato, — was combated vigorously by Grote in his History of Greece, vol. 8, c. 67, as well as in his Plato, passim. The truth of the matter has been clearly set forth and the final word perhaps said in Sidgwick's reasoned discussion of Grote's view of the sophists, in the (English) Journal of Philology, vol. 4, no. 8 (1872).

σοφός 3: skillful, clever, accomplished, learned, wise. Thus Socrates found that the handicraftsmen of Athens were in their way σοφώτεροι (possessed of greater skill and knowledge) than he was, 22 D. But the word early came to be used in a sense of disparagement (see σοφιστής). Thus in the indictment of Socrates, σοφὸς ἀνὴρ . . . τὸν ἥττω λόγον κρείττω ποιῶν 18 B. ἀνὴρ σοφός, said with irony by Plato of the sophist Evenus, 20 A. In attempting to interpret the oracle which had pronounced him the wisest of men Socrates is made to give a new, negative, turn to the word σοφός, 'wise in recognizing one's own limitations as to knowledge.' Cp. Appl. 21 D. See σοφία. He contrasts the sophists sharply with himself in this regard: οὔτοι δὲ τάχ' ἄν . . . μείζω ἢ κατ' ἀνθρώπων σοφίαν σοφοὶ εἴεν 20 D. A kind of superhuman presumption.

Σφήττιος 3: of Sphettus, an Attic deme lying toward Cape Sunium, of the tribe of Acamantia, 33 E.

σχεδόν (ἔχειν, σχεῖν): nearly, pretty near, about. Often in Plato, with a tone of Attic reserve, to prevent a statement from sounding harsh or too positive. οἶδα σχεδόν, 'I'm pretty sure,' 24 A. Cp. 34 B. With τι, Crit. 46 B. σχεδόν τι δῆλον, 'tolerably evident,' 53 B.

Σωκράτης, -ους: Socrates, son of Sophroniscus, the Athenian philosopher, 18 B, 19 B, C, 23 B, D, 24 B, E, 26 E, 27 A, 28 B, 29 C, 34 E, 38 C, Crit. 43 A, etc. His death, by the draught of hemlock, occurred 399 B.C., when he was seventy years of age (Apol. 17 D, see also Crit. 52 E). The year of his birth would accordingly be 469 B.C. His mother, Phaenarete, was a midwife, and Plato makes Socrates compare his process of delivering men's minds of the ideas with which they are pregnant to the maieutic art, Theaet. 149. His father was a statuary, cp. the allusion Euthyphr. 11. Socrates himself began by following the profession of his father, and is said to have executed a work deemed worthy of preservation, Paus. 1. 22. 8, 9. 35. 7. The name of Xanthippe, the wife of Socrates, has become proverbial for a termagant. See Xen. Symp. 2. 10, Mem. 2. 2, and cp. Plato, Phaed. 60 A. There were three sons, two of them mere children at the time of their father's death, Apol. 34 D. Socrates had the satyr-like physiognomy—flat nose, thick lips, and projecting eyes, Xen. Symp. 5, Plato, Symp. 215, cp. Ar. Nub. 362. His powers of physical endurance were extraordinary (see Ποσειδάλα), and his self-control is celebrated in the Symposium of Plato and elsewhere. His courage in battle was conspicuous (see Δήλιον), while of the moral courage of Socrates memorable examples are preserved, apart from the culminating scenes of his trial and his death. See βουλή, ναυμαχία, Λέων. As philosopher his position was unique. Other men had asserted and practiced the ethical truths for which Socrates stood; but no man before Socrates had reasoned them out exhaustively and shown the identity of the intellectual and the moral. His was the first conscious elaboration of the scientific definition—arriving at a general notion thro' elimination of false or unessential accessories. Between what a man knows and what he does not know Socrates was thus enabled to draw a distinct line, relegating the unknown to the sphere of divine intelligence (see τὸ δαιμόνιον, under δαιμόνιος). See εἰδέναι, σοφία. Thus his mission came to be clearing the minds of men of the conceit of knowledge without its reality, hence the famous paradox Apol. 23 A, B. The enthusiasm of Socrates in his great work of testing his own mind and the minds of other men in search of reasoned truth is celebrated by Plato in the Apology as an inspiration due to a divine command.

Τελαμών, -ώνος: Telamon, king of Salamis, the father of Ajax, 41 B. Telamon was the son of Aeacus and brother of Peleus. Thus Ajax and Achilles were cousins.

τιμᾶν (τιμή): to estimate, to value, prize, honor, 32 A, Crit. 47 A. As Attic law-terms, the mid. τιμᾶσθαι, to propose a penalty, is said of either prosecutor or defendant, τιμᾶται μοι ὁ ἀνὴρ θανάτου 36 B, ἐξήν σοι φυγῆς τιμῆσασθαι Crit. 52 C; while the act. τιμῆσαι, to decide upon a penalty, is said of the judges, in an ἀγὼν τιμητός. Also ἀντιτιμᾶσθαι Apol. 36 B. The active and middle occur side by side 37 C, 38 B. See δίκη.

τίμημα, -ατος, τό: a valuation, a penalty, punishment, 39 B.

τις, τὶ, gen. τινός or τοῦ, dat. τινί or τῷ, enclitic; plur. neut. nom. and acc. τινά encl., ἅττα not encl., 30 C: some one, one, something; any one, any, anything. Idiomatic phrase, εἶναι τι, 'to be something,' i.e. to be of some account or importance, 'to be superior' in any respect, 41 E. δοκοῦντας μὲν τι εἶναι, θαυμάσια δ' ἐργαζομένους, 35 A. τοὺς δοκοῦντας καὶ ὀπιοῦν τι εἶναι, 35 B. Cp. οἱ δοκοῦντες διαφέρειν σοφία, εἰς ἀρετήν, ib. Similar is λέγειν τι, 'to speak to some purpose,'

Crit. 46 D. See λέγειν. ἥ τι ἢ οὐδέν 'little or nothing,' Apol. 17 B. So ὀλίγον τιὸς καὶ οὐδενός 23 A.

τριάκοντα: thirty. οἱ τριάκοντα, 'the Thirty' (tyrants, so-called), 32 C. Upon the surrender of Athens to Lysander the Lacedaemonian, at the close of the Peloponnesian War, 404 B.C., a committee of thirty citizens of anti-democratic views was appointed; ostensibly, 'to write up the ancestral laws for the conduct of the commonwealth,' Xen. Hell. 2. 3. 2. Practically, the Thirty assumed control of the government, securing a senate and magistrates subservient to their designs. Some wholesome measures were adopted at first, but the Thirty, with a Spartan garrison to back them, soon became genuine tyrants. Inoffensive persons, not aliens only, but even citizens, if possessed of wealth, were liable to be arrested and put to death without form of law, while their property was seized and appropriated. See Δέων. A schism presently showed itself in the board. Theramenes, who counseled moderation, stood against Critias, leader of the extremists. Its immediate result was the enrolling of a list of 3000 citizens, who might not be proscribed without a trial, and were nominally to share by their suffrages in the governing power. This led to increased severity toward those citizens whose names were not on the list of the 3000. Thus the faction grew hotter, until the death of Theramenes was compassed by the machinations of Critias. A veritable "reign of terror" followed this event, and such patriotic men as were not counted in the 3000 were driven from the city. See Xen. Hell. 2. 4. 1. The régime of the Thirty is termed ὀλιγαρχία Apol. 32 C. It lasted eight months (April to December, 404 B.C.), ἡ ἀρχὴ διὰ ταχέων κατελύθη, 32 D. See φυγή.

Τριπτόλεμος: Triptolemus, an Attic legendary hero who hospitably entertained the goddess Demeter at Eleusis, and received from her the gifts of agriculture, 41 A. Plato in this passage associates Triptolemus with the judges of the Lower World.

Τροίη: Troy, or Ilium, in Asia Minor, scene of the ten-years war described in the Homeric poems, 41 B.

Φ

φάναι: to say yes, affirm, aver; ἔφη, ἔφη (Lat. inquit), 20 B. Cp. φάσκειν, 21 B. φῆς ἢ οὐ, 'do you say yes or no', 27 D, Crit. 49 B. οὐ φημι, Lat. nego. (The arrangement 26 C is not the usual one.) ἔάν τε σὺ καὶ ἄνθρωπος οὐ φῆτε ἔάν τε φῆτε, 'whether you deny it or not, Apol. 25 B. See οὐ.

φεύγειν: to flee, shun, avoid, 26 A, 29 B, Crit. 53 C; in civil sense, to be in exile, Crit. 53 B. In Attic law, φεύγειν, 'to be on trial,' 'to be defendant' in a suit; ὁ φεύγων, 'the defendant.' See αἰρεῖν. With gen. of the offense charged, ἀσεβέας φεύγοντα ὑπὸ Μελήρου Apol. 35 D. With Cognate Accusative, μή πως ἐγὼ . . . τοσαύτας δίκας φύγοιμι, 'may I ne'er come to be prosecuted on such grave charges,' 19 C.

φιλοσοφείν: to be φιλόσοφος or wisdom-loving, to philosophize, 23 D, 28 E, 29 D. Of learned study in general, πάντες οἱ φιλοσοφοῦντες, 23 D. Of the special activity of Socrates, 28 E, 29 D.

Φθίη: epic form of Phthia, name of an ancient city in Thessaly, on the river Spercheios, the realm of Peleus, father of Achilles, and the Myrmidons, Crit. 44 B (quoted from Iliad I 363). See Iliad B 683. The name likewise designates the district, the later Phthiotis, Iliad I 395. See Θερραλία.

φρόνησις, -εως, ἡ (φρονεῖν, φρήν): a thinking, reasoning, wisdom. φρονήσεως καὶ ἀληθείας καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς 29 E. φρόνησις is opposed to ἀμαθία (folly) in the same way as σοφία, cp. μεταξὺ ἀμαθίας καὶ φρονήσεως Symp. 202 A. Cp. φρονίμως ἔχειν 22 A, and see σοφία, ἀμαθία.

φυγή: flight; in civil sense, exile, 37 C, Crit. 52 C. Particularly, Apol. 21 A τὴν φυγὴν ταύτην, 'the recent banishment,' of patriotic Athenians in the time of the Thirty Tyrants, 404 B.C. See τριάκοντα. The exiles took refuge mostly in Thebes and Megara. Starting from Thebes, Thrasybulus, with seventy friends, took possession of Phyle, a little stronghold in Attica, on the road to Boeotia. An attack thereon by the Thirty proved a failure, who accordingly ensconced themselves at Eleusis. From Phyle Thrasybulus, whose force had swelled to upwards of 1000 men, entered the Piraeus. The Thirty were forced to rally with their adherents. In the conflict that ensued they were defeated, and their leader Critias was slain. After some complications, the Thirty being succeeded by a board of Ten, who with assistance from Sparta carried on the war against Thrasybulus, the final result was the overthrow of oligarchy and the permanent restoration of the Democracy of Athens in September, 403 B.C. See Xen. Hell. 2. 4.

Χαιρέφων, -ωνος: Chaerephon, an Athenian of the deme of Sphettus, a companion of Socrates, 20 E, 21 A. Xenophon says that Chaerephon was one of those who listened to Socrates, not to become influential in public speaking or at law, but to make themselves "fair and good" in all social relations, Mem. 1. 2. 48. He was a butt of the ridicule of comedy, figuring side by side with Socrates in some of the ludicrous scenes of the Clouds, see vv. 140, 144, 156. In the Birds he is called the bat (νυκτερίς), on account of his cadaverous and sal-low look, Ar. Av. 1564. Chaerephon had attached himself to Socrates from early youth, and was enthusiastically devoted to the master. Plato characterizes him as σφοδρὸς and μανικὸς (Charm. 153 B). He was thus well suited to the fiction of the oracle, capable of asking the god at Delphi whether any man was wiser than Socrates. And as he had been one of the exiles who returned with Thrasybulus (see φύγῃ), a reference to Chaerephon at the trial would presumably not be unacceptable to a dicastery impaneled under the Restored Democracy of Athens. See the note on Apol. 21 A.

χρηστός (χρήσθαι) 3: good, 33 B. A synonym of ἀγαθός, as πονηρός and μοχθηρός are synonyms of κακός. Opposed to πονηρός 25 C, Crit. 47 A.

TABLE OF VARIOUS READINGS

[The readings of the present edition are shown in the left-hand column of the Table, and when followed by no indication to the contrary, have the authority of the best Ms. (B), as far as they go. The words inclosed in brackets in the right-hand column have been rejected as spurious on the authority (originally) of the critic first named.

The readings of Schanz in his annotated edition of the Apology are followed by the date (1893) when they differ from those of his text edition of 1875.

B = Codex Bodleianus (Oxford).
C = Codex Crusianus (Tübingen).
D = Codex Venetus 185.
E = Codex Venetus 184.
F = Codex Vaticanus 1029.

The small letters b, c, d, e, f, indicate corrections by later hands in the above-named Mss. respectively.]
